SR. H. P. CHASE writes:—"I praise God that the set time to favor Zion has about come. Soon Babylon the Great will go down like a mill-stone into the sea, and then the whole earth will be lighted with his glory, and all the saints will praise God, saying. 'Amen! Alleluia!' Already the woman spoken of in Rev. 17: 18, that said in her heart, 'I sit a queen and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow,' sits on the ground in the dust, without a throne, no more to be called the 'Lady of kingdoms.' Read Isaiah 47. We have only to wait a little while, when they that are ready will go in with Him to the marriage, and the door will be shut. We have not one moment to spare. Soon the voice from the throne will say, 'It is done' Sinner, get ready. Hasten for your life to the arms of Christ, who is mighty to save."

BRO. J. T. ONGLEY writes:—"Having given up the mill into the hands of others to run this winter, I therefore go out into the field, trying in my weak way to proclaim the unsearchable riches of the gospel of Christ, and try to persuade men to become acquainted with him, and be ready for his appearing. Pray for me, that I may do my duty, and be a humble follower of the meek and lowly Savior. If any should wish my labors, they can address me at Lincolnville, Crawford Co., Pa."

BRO. J. G. HOOK writes from Philadelphia:—"God is moving the people here to repentance. Convicting power attends his word preached in the tent Evangelist. A goodly number have set out in the christian course, and backsliders have been reclaimed. Brotherly love increases among all christians of the various denominations. The truth is taking deep root in the hearts of many. We continue another week."

REPORT OF THE MASSACHUSETTS A. C. CONFERENCE.

The conference held its first quarterly session of this year at North Adams. Meeting commenced according to a call by the secretary, Oct. 12th, by preaching by the secretary, also Thursday afternoon and evening.

14th. The conference met for business at half-past ten A. M. The secretary in the chair. Members present: Elds. George. A. Streeter, Rufus Starks. Delegates: Isaac Blanchard, Jr., North Adams; A. E. Bliss, Savoy (New State). As there was no business, proceeded to hear reports. Bro. R. Starks said he labored most of his time with his hands on his farm, preaching some Sundays. Last spring he engaged to preach one half of the time at Savoy (New State); did so until the first of August; have not been there but once since. Been to King's Corner and Hawley some; quite an interest there. Feels friendly to the conference, for thereby the wants of the churches were made known to each other. The reason why he did not attend other conferences, was the expense. Let the conference live. He would not labor with every one; does not want a religion that costs nothing.

Bro. I. Blanchard, Jr., reported the North Adams church. We have not lost anything yet; quite a lack in the members; have some that are true; have had men that distracted us, but there is more spirit of union now than there was fifteen months ago, and there was more encouragement for the year to come. Have had preaching one half the time since February, by Sister E. Warren. God has blessed her labors. Have a Sunday School and Bible class for old and young. Are not organized as a church yet. As an individual, he thought delegates should be sent.

Bro. A. E. Bliss reported the Savoy church

(New State). Am in favor of the conference. Had a great desire to attend. As to our church, I have not the good news to bring that sinners are being converted, but brotherly love continues. We number about thirty members. Have some strong members. We have enjoyed the labors of Bro. Starks and Sr. E. Warren. Have been prospered since our organization. Thought they ought to keep up the ordinances of the church more. Have a Sunday School and a Bible class. Average number, thirty.

Voted, that Sr. Warren report the Dalton church. Our numbers are few, but are increasing. Number about fifteen souls. Have no regular meetings. Think they will establish weekly meetings. Some in the M. E. church are in our faith. Sr. W. spoke of her labors. Have labored in Savoy (New State) and No. Adams the past season. Have had to cling to the Lord. Felt a burden for No. Adams. Probably there are more backsliders there than in any other place. Shall try to get sinners converted. Want the power of God. A great responsibility rests on the ministry; feels the need of studying the word more.

Some remarks were made about having shepherds stationed over the people. The meeting was then thrown open to the brethren and sisters in general. Adjourned.

Saturday, half-past ten o'clock. Met according to adjournment. Prayer by Bro. Harrison, Hoosick. N. Y. Bro. S. Wheelock reported the cause in South Adams. All gone down for want of room to hold meetings. A good chance to do good there. The meeting was then thrown open to the church. Many were the interesting reports given. Bro. Harrison gave a lengthy history of the church in Hoosick, N. Y. Had numbered four, but now there are about fifty members. Were having a season of revival. The whole community was stirred.

Preaching by Bro. R. Starks, the secretary, Srs. Warren and Mirick. The church in No. Adams did nobly to entertain all that would come. The conference closed Sunday evening, and as the result we have had blessed meetings. Several backsliders were reclaimed. Many were convicted of our faith, and some acknowledged it. One was baptized. It was one of the best conferences we have ever had, and we never have had a poor one yet. If all would take an interest in it, as they should, it would be better still. Owing to the distance, not many of the members were there, but the good Lord met with the few. Praise his holy name.

Adjourned to the call of the secretary.

Geo. A. Streeter, Sec.

P. S.—Any church wishing the conference in January to meet with them, please notify the secretary soon. G. A. S.

A PROTRACTED MEETING.

As the interest was so good, we thought it best to hold a protracted meeting through the week following the conference, and three more were converted. It was old-fashioned conversion. Groanings were heard all over the hall. Never did we witness so much of the convicting power of God, as on the eve of the 22nd. It seemed that the whole congregation was before the judgment.

We left Monday, the 24th, and the interest was still onward. Praise God. Never was there the time when men would hear as now. There is quite a stir in the village. May God bless and keep all committed to his care. Pray for me. Thy Bro. in Christ, expecting the return of the Son of God soon.

Geo. A. Streeter.

Obituaries.

Sweet. Fell asleep in Jesus, Sept. 17th, in Fairfield, Ohio, after a lingering illness, Bro. Charles R. Sweet, of blessed memory, aged fifty-six years and twenty-six days.

Bro. Sweet was one of those christians whose daily walk and conversation gave to the world the strongest assurance that he was what he professed to be—a child of God, an heir of eternal life in glory. His funeral was attended by a large concourse of citizens, who listened to words of comfort and admonition from 2 Sam. 14: 14. Bro Sweet leaves an aged father, three sisters, three daughters and a son, to anticipate his soon rising again to life eternal at the coming of Jesus.

Holcomb. Died, at "Our Home on the Hillside," Hatley, P. Q., Sept. 18th, 1870, Ephraim Holcomb, our honored father, after months of painful illness, in sure and certain hope of the resurrection and the future unending glorious life.

He lived an honest man, a christian, and died at peace with God and all mankind, leaving no enemies behind, but many friends, aged almost eighty years.

We bore him to his former island home, Isle La Motte, Vt., over ninety miles away, where his flesh rests "in hope." Funeral sermon by Eld. D. T. Taylor, from Rom. 8: 22, 23.

Johnson. Fell asleep in Christ, in Plainville, Conn., Oct. 24th, Caroline B., wife of Dennis Johnson, aged sixty-four years.

Sister Johnson embraced Christ about forty years ago, and maintained her christian integrity until she became irresponsible through the failure of her mental powers, about seven years ago, since which time she has suffered much. Reason seemed occasionally to flash its light across her mind, when she would speak of "Jesus and his love."

Words of comfort were spoken by the writer.

William N. Pile.

Savery. Fell asleep in Jesus, Oct. 14th, Sister Delia Savery, of Marion, aged fifty-two years.

Sister Savery was a consistent and faithful christian, a lover of Jesus, and a believer in his speedy coming.

May this affliction be duly sanctified to the family and friends of the deceased. J. Maxim.

A Great City. Such is New York. The census just taken says it has a population of 930,356. Its comparative growth may be seen by comparing the present with the twenty years preceding. In 1850 it had a population of 515,547; in 1860, 813,669; in 1870 as above. Manhattan is now literally full—room must now be sought outside of "Peter Stuyvesant's City."

The Peace Problem. The negotiations toward peace have assumed the following phases: Queen Victoria has written a letter to King William urging him to moderate his demands, the Tours government has accepted the principle of the proposed armistice and M. Thiers' pass into Paris will be ready within a week.—N. Y. Herald.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

Tours, Oct. 25. Late advices from Paris show that the sortie on the 21st was exceedingly successful. Many Prussians were killed and taken prisoners. As the wind has been unfavorable for several days past no balloons have left Paris. From private but reliable sources we hear that there are vast numbers sick in the camps of the besiegers. On many occasions the discontent of the men has been loudly expressed and their commanding officers have been obliged to go often among the troops to keep up their morale. Sorties are made nightly by small parties of Parisians, and the constant firing at night from the forts severely harasses the Prussians. Up to the present time the latter have not succeeded in erecting batteries of siege guns near enough to begin an effective bombardment of the city.

The Pall Mall Gazette announces that Queen Victoria has bestowed her royal assent upon the marriage of Lord Lorne with the Princess Louise.

The Surrender of Metz.

Ostend, Oct. 27. The statement received from Mercy le Haut to the effect that upon receiving a formal declaration, signed by the Empress, that she was unwilling to sign a treaty involving the cession a probable outbreak of civil war in France, Bazaine exclaimed that he would take all the necessary responsibility himself. This was on Wednesday night. Bazaine immediately sent a Parliamenterre through his lines to Prince Frederick Charles, at Pont-a-Mouson. The Prince came up during the night to Chateau de Frescoty, where, this morning early, stipulations were signed for the surrender of the army of Bazaine and the fortress of Metz.

A correspondent says that the total loss of the army of Prince Frederick Charles from the beginning of the siege is estimated at 45,000 men by battle and disease. The army of Prince Frederick Charles consisted on the 20th of October of the first, second, third, seventh, eighth, ninth and tenth army corps with two divisions of Landwehr attached to the ninth army corps, making a total of 160,000 men, artillery and cavalry included.

London, Oct. 27. The surrender of Bazaine, it is stated, was made upon a full understanding with the Prussian government that the occupation of Metz and Strasbourg shall be accepted as an adequate basis for withdrawing the German armies from France and concluding peace.

The Republicans in London loudly declare the Marshal a traitor; that he concocted his action with Prince Napoleon, the Emperor and King William, and that the government at Paris and Tours will repudiate any peace proposed or signed by him.

Berlin, Oct. 27. The Queen Augusta, who is at present at the Royal Chateau at Hamburg, has received the following telegram from King William, announcing the capitulation of the fortress and garrison of Metz, and which has been re-telegraphed to this city to be officially bulletined:

"Versailles, Oct. 27. To Queen Augusta, Hamburg: Marshal Bazaine, commanding the French garrison at Metz, capitulated this morning. His army consisted of 150,000 soldiers, including 20,000 sick, and are in our hands.

The army under Marshal Bazaine, and the regular garrison, lay down their arms this afternoon.

This is one of the most important events that has occurred to our army during the present month. Let us return thanks to a merciful Providence, who has so graciously accorded us such victories. Signed, William."

London, Oct. 27. The Prince of Wales and the Princess Alexandria have visited the Empress Eugenie.

The London press abandon the hopes of peace, but the cabinet is confident of success. Among the signs of peace is the fact that the superintendent-general of the Prussian army has refused to renew the contracts for provisions expiring on the 20th.

The Pope Dejected.

Florence, Oct. 28. Recent accounts from Rome, from authoritative sources, represent that the Pope is extremely dejected at the loss of his temporal sovereignty. He has refused all endeavors to draw him from his seclusion, and cannot be prevailed upon to go beyond the quarters of the Vatican. It is also announced that he is resolved to push resistance to the final act of occupation to the utmost. He has forbidden the usual October amusements upon Thursdays and Saturdays, and allows the entire household of the Vatican to partake of grand banquets, while he himself presides only at desert on Sunday.

Napoleon to go to the Island of Elba for his Health.

Berlin, Oct. 28. Berlin correspondence announces that the Emperor Napoleon will go to the Island of Elba early in November, owing to the precarious condition of his health, which requires a milder climate.

Berlin, Oct. 28. The capitulation of Metz was signed by a representative of the Prussian and French armies yesterday.

The forts surrounding the city and the town will be occupied by the Prussians to-morrow.

The total number of prisoners included in the terms of capitulation numbers 173,000, including three field marshals and six thousand officers.

Expected Chinese Insurrection.

London, Oct 28. A dispatch from Bombay announces that a day has been fixed by the Chinese for the massacre of all foreigners, and they are marching and distributing their troops accordingly. Consuls everywhere notice increasing hostility and insolence among the native population. There is much excitement among the English and French residents.

London, Oct. 28. The Manchester Guardian to-day gives the following terms of peace, proposed by England, Russia and Austria:

First. No cession of territory.

Second. The fortifications of Metz and Strasbourg to be razed.

Third. France to pay two hundred million of francs indemnity.

The neutrals are to guarantee peace.

Brussels, Oct. 29. The capitulation of Metz has thrown the Bonapartists into despair. This city is the grand centre of their schemes.

Berlin, Oct. 29. The Kreuz Zeitung of to-day says that the last summons to surrender have been forwarded to the military authorities inside the Paris fortifications, and that the bombardment of the city will begin next week.

London, Oct. 30. Dispatches from all parts of France state that the people are enraged at the fall of Metz, which was thought impregnable.

It is said that peace between the combatants is now less possible than ever, and France must continue to combat her foe with energy and not despair.

Tours, Oct. 30. A profound impression was produced here by the news of Bazaine's surrender. The majority deem it a political move, and express intense indignation. The army of the Loire, which had been largely increased, was ready to attack the Prussian forces, and much was expected from it toward the deliverance of Paris, but the surrender of Metz checks its efforts.

It is estimated that the Prussians have taken, up to the present day, 320,000 French prisoners.

London, Oct. 31. A correspondent at Versailles, in a despatch dated the 30th inst., states that formal notice of the capitulation of Metz had been sent to Paris under a flag of truce. The King of Prussia has announced his determination to immediately bombard the city (Paris.) He considers that the immense number of prisoners who must inevitably be subjected to all the privations of hunger and suffering consequent upon the long siege of Metz would, under the circumstances, be more mercifully dealt with by forcing an entry for them into Paris, and be the proper tribute of respect to those who fought best for France.

In Brief.

☞ England is about trying a postal experiment which, if successful, will be an advance in the science of cheap postage. It has been tried in Germany with great success, especially during the war, and is known as the card-post system. The cards are issued by the post office at a lower price apiece than the regular postage on a letter. They contain a space for an address, another for a message, another for signature. The people of German cities buy and carry them about in the pocket, but use them to write letters upon, usually in pencil, in the street or anywhere, and simply drop them into the nearest post office receptacle. For all messages that do not require secrecy one can dispense with pen, stamps and envelopes. In England the card is to cost one penny.

☞ At the consecration of the Jewish synagogue in Columbus, Ohio, the pulpit was occupied not merely by rabbis, but also by six clergymen, four of them Methodists, one a Presbyterian, and the sixth a Congregationalist.

☞ The Empress Eugenie's dwelling at Chiselhurst, England, was rented for her use from an attorney named Strode, in London. We are assured by special cable telegram from England to-day that the estate is merely held by Mr. Strode as trustee of the Countess Beauregard, a pensioned mistress of Napoleon, for the use of her illegitimate son by Bonaparte.

☞ The Catholics of England are signing a petition to the Pope asking him to take his pontifical throne to Ireland, where he would be tolerably sure of finding friends.

☞ The piles under the London bridge have been driven five hundred years, and on examining them in 1846 they were found to be little decayed. Old Savoy Place in the city of London, was built six hundred and fifty years ago, and the wooden piles consisting of oak, elm, beech, and chestnut, were found, upon recent examination, to be perfectly sound. Of the durability of timber in a wet state, the piles of a bridge built by the Emperor Trajan, over the Danube, affords a striking example. One of these piles was taken up and found to be petrified to the depth of three-fourths of an inch; but the rest of the wood was not different from its former state, though it had been there one thousand six hundred years.

☞ It is said that a day has been fixed for a general attack on all the Christians in the Chinese Empire. If China is able in this civilized age to repeat the St. Bartholemew massacre it will not be good for China; but Great Britain, Russia and the United States will not be free from blame. It is evident that the Chinese people are under some horrible priestly influence, and that if they are not restrained they will do some terrible work.

☞ The Lancet says: "It is a curious fact that of the passengers in the train which met with a terrible accident lately, all, or very nearly all, who were asleep at the time escaped uninjured—nature's anæsthetic insuring them not only against fractures and contusions, but even against the bad effects of shaking and concussion."

The Pope has formally suspended the session of the Ecumenical Council on the ground that there had been a sacrilegious invasion on the territory of the Church which might prevent freedom of action by the Pope and Fathers. The Jubilee proclaimed in honor of the Council, however, is not suspended.

☞ Another hurricane has swept over the coasts of Florida and Cuba. Six vessels were wrecked in the harbor of Key West, and great damage was caused to the shipping in Havana.

☞ Piano making is the third manufacturing interest in this country.

War Items.

☞ The war spirit of the women of Germany is quite as strong as that of the warlike sex. In every possible way they have sustained the strength and enthusiasm of the army, and have given great assistance in the furnishing of supplies and in taking care of the wounded or sick. The German papers are filled with facts illustrative of these statements.

☞ Many heavy guns of the Prussian navy have been sent to Paris.

The fortifications of Strasbourg are being rapidly repaired. All the masons, carpenters and laborers of the town are impressed at high wages.

The prisoners taken at Marshal Bazaine's last great sortie, says a Berlin telegram, declare that his soldiers forced him to choose between another attempt to escape or to surrender.

☞ The French regard England's last effort at mediation with extreme distrust. It is reported on the Continent that Queen Victoria has written to the King of Prussia, urging him to moderate his demands.

☞ Bismarck's constant answer to the advances daily made to him for peace is that the election by the French of some authorized government is an indispensable preliminary.

☞ Baden, Wurtemburg and Southern Hesse have, according to the Berlin correspondent of the London Times, signified their intention to join the North German Confederacy and ratify its constitution with some slight modifications. The King of Bavaria still holds back.

☞ It is regretted by the best friends of the Empress that she should have allowed herself to be persuaded to leave Chiselhurst and to come to London at all, but it is understood that she did so only in consequence of an unofficial communication made to her on the part of Queen Victoria, who has been personally though probably very active in attempting to secure an arrangement upon a basis satisfactory to King William and the Crown Prince, whose extreme anxiety for peace is no longer a secret in well-informed circles.

☞ The Czar has sent the order of St. George to the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg, Schwerin, with an autograph letter, expressing earnest aspirations for peace.

☞ Despatches from Tours announce that a young girl of that city is creating the most intense excitement by imitating Joan of Arc. Hundreds of enthusiastic persons have joined her standard. Her appeals for recruits are said to be singularly patriotic and eloquent.

☞ America contributed the Monitor to modern warfare. Paris bids fair to contribute the balloon. It has utilized this plaything to a remarkable degree, sending mails, passengers, and even the prime Minister out of the city by this mode of passage. If it should succeed in returning to town, its victory would be complete, and the balloon would be likely to remain after the war a useful means of locomotion.

☞ The troubles at Marseilles are increasing. The red republicans are largely in the ascendant and are in open rebellion against the republican authorities at Paris and Tours. They have even gone so far as to offer a reward for M. Gambetta's head.

☞ The Prussians have removed all the art treasures from Sevres to Versailles.

☞ The English at Paris are under the protection of Mr. Washburne, as the Charge d'Affairs has not recognized the republican government and has no authority to act.

☞ It is reported that Mazzini, the noted Italian republican leader, has left Italy, and is now on his way to Tours.

☞ There is no doubt that the French provisional government will soon be obliged to leave Tours. Arrangements are now making for transferring the national headquarters to Clermont, in the Department of Puy de Dome.

☞ Marshal Bazaine's army, comprised the very flower of the French military force, excepting only the First corps, which was beaten by overpowering numbers at Woerth, and subsequently surrendered at Sedan.

☞ A telegram from Tours says that from all parts of the country there comes but one expression—the hope that the government will accept no humiliating conditions as the price of peace. The journals of that city are unanimous that the only hope for fair terms lies in the indefinite prosecution of the war.

☞ Bazaine was recently informed that he could only have the terms which were accorded to McMahon at Sedan.

☞ There are over 2000 sick and wounded French and German soldiers in and around Versailles. The forts Vauves, Montrouge and Bicetre are now connected by strong earthworks.

☞ Bazaine, upon the deposition of Gen. Le Boeuf, was put in command of the troops at Metz in the first week of August. On the 15th he was attacked under the walls of Metz and driven within the city. On the 16th he attempted to leave Metz for Verdun, but, after twelve hours' fighting, was driven back with heavy loss. Then came the battles of Gravelotte and Mars la Tour. On the 21st Bazaine was shut up within his fortifications, where he has remained till the present time, or about nine and a half weeks.

☞ A correspondent at Ostend sends extracts from the press of Cologne, Berlin and Breslau, setting forth the severe pressure of the times on the people. The prices of all necessaries of life are rising, societies are forming for the support of the enormous number of families thrown upon the charity of the public. In the cities of the Elbe and in the capital, prostitution is increasing to an extent which alarms the sanitary authorities. The general feeling of the country is growing bitterly hostile to the continuance of the war, and the liberals are no longer silenced by the authorities in their protests, as the feeling which they represent has become too strong to be suppressed by force.

☞ It is reported that England, Prussia and Italy have acquiesced in the candidacy of Aosta for the Spanish crown.

☞ In the East the Prussian army has been suddenly and decisively stopped. Their march upon Lyons has been checked by the victories of the French under Garibaldi. The latter, ever since he took command, has acted vigorously, taken many prisoners and cannon, and accomplished the object for which he set forth.

☞ The military situation on the Loire is unchanged.

☞ Greece has recognized the French Republic.

☞ Volunteers for the French army have arrived from Martinique.

☞ Count Stanislas Leszczynski addressed a letter to the London Standard urging that Russia intends attacking Constantinople, and the only way she can be prevented is by a Polish insurrection, which it is the duty of England to foment.

☞ Shocks of earthquake were felt last week at Athens, Greece, simultaneously with the appearance of a brilliant aurora.

☞ "An order," says the Lyons correspondent of the London Times, "compelling all the priests to serve in the National Guard, under penalty of three days' imprisonment, has filled the clerical body with consternation and dismay, in consequence of a still more audacious and sacrilegious act on the part of the municipality, who are reported to have sent an order to serve in the National Guard to no less a person than the Archbishop himself. As might be supposed under these circumstances, priests are rarely to be seen."

Knowing the power of valuable books in making effectual impressions of truth, and the ease with which agents form large clubs for a paper when they can offer a book free to each subscriber, we have concluded to publish in the first number of the Banner a list of books, by our best writers, mostly on prophetical and doctrinal subjects (prices from 25 to 50 cents, in paper covers), and send the choice from the list post paid, free, to every yearly subscriber.

"The Banner" for Free Distribution.

We will furnish the Bible Banner for free distribution at 40 cents a year, or a few samples by mail, with or without price, to all who will send us their address.

The "Banner" and the "Crisis."

Any subscriber to the World's Crisis who has not paid for the year 1871, by remitting $3.25 to the Crisis office, will receive both papers during the year; and any person who has not been a subscriber to the Crisis, by remitting $3.25 to the Crisis office, shall receive both papers for the year 1871.

"The Bible Banner" Free.

Those who devote their time and energies to the gospel ministry can have the Banner free by sending us subscribers; and any person who will act as our agent, and send us five or more subscribers, with the money, can have the Banner free, or retain 25 per cent., or select a premium from the large list of valuable articles which will appear in the first number of the paper. We hope to be able by the issue of the first number to announce a systematic plan, by which all who have willing hands and hearts may do much in the good cause.

Oh, let us wake up, trim our lamps, and let the world hear the cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." We hope all who love the truth to which the Banner is specially devoted, and can take the paper or work for it, will subscribe at once and send for prospectus and sample copies.

Money by draft, or post office order on New York, made payable to H. A. King (resident editor), may be sent at our risk. Address

"THE BIBLE BANNER,"
240 Broadway, Room 15, New York.

INDIAN SUMMER.

Wrapped in peaceful stillness Nature lies,
As if, while gazing on the quiet skies,
She had looked past their depths, and met God's eyes,
And in that gaze grew calm;
As if awed by the solemn sight she lay,
Or fallen asleep, was dreaming life away,
Singing unconsciously by night and day
A reverential psalm.

Half veiled in golden light of shimmering air,
The landscape stretches, wondrously fair,
No trace of paling beauty anywhere;
Nature is in her prime.
In richest robes the hills and woods appear,
The lakes and springs lie motionless and clear.
Ruled by the fairest queen of all the year—
Beautiful harvest time.

The silver river, winding through the lea,
The singing birds on every greenwood tree,
The music of the never silent tree,
The deep and silent wood,
Are never-changing witnesses that He
Who made all these fair things so graciously,
Is mighty in his love, and prayerfully
I whisper, "God is good."

MASSACHUSETTS CONFERENCE.

DEAR BRETHREN:—The time has gone by for tent meetings, but in every place where it has been my lot to be with the tent in these meetings, they have been successful in reaching a class of people which could not otherwise be reached. And many have become interested in the plan of redemption to be consummated at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. The tent has done the work contemplated by the contributors to the fund; namely, going into new places; and we have done our best to find such spots to put it, and many will rejoice that they heard the gospel of the kingdom and coming of the Lord under the free-spread canvas.

Some of our meetings have been a great blessing to the people, who were not afraid to come and hear and judge for themselves; but the truth that we hold dear, and are loyal to, is under reproach. It is looked down upon with disdain by the multitude of popular professors of christianity; so by grace we have to crowd our way on amid opposition and difficulties seen and unseen; but the Lord is good, and truth will elevate and lift up wonderfully all those who believe and obey it.

They are strong, vigorous, joyful, bold and persevering, bearing reproach cheerfully, and standing straight, with head uplifted, knowing that their feet are treading the path of duty, and that they are founded on the immutable word of God.

While trying to work our way into new fields, it is a matter of grief, yes, great grief, to contend with obstacles directly in the way. The evangelical church and ministry either openly or secretly oppose us at every step. Their prejudices and anathemas we feel everywhere, but without retaliation or unkindness, we tremble for their responsibility in retarding the way of truth and of life. But the Lord is our shepherd, we shall not want. We have nought to fear. The Lord Jesus Christ, the Holy Spirit, the word of God, which is to make us wise unto salvation, which by faith will hold us up and make us stand, the word of his grace, which will comfort and give us an inheritance among all the sanctified, are ours. Amen. I feel the assurance. Glory be to God. The word of God by the Spirit, soul-reviving, is good enough to preach everywhere.

Then, dearly beloved, put on the whole armor, be bold for God and his blessed word. Do not be ashamed of any portion of it. Given by inspiration, it is profitable for doctrine, for correction, thoroughly furnishing a man for every good word and work. Let us in the name of our Lord crowd it into every market where chaff, fables, infidelity and spiritism are constantly on hand. Let us feel as courageous as the man who knows he has by every comparison the best articles that can be produced. Let new places be searched out and protracted meetings be established. This now is emphatically the work of the Mass. Conference. Let all feel a responsibility in this direction, by giving of their means, also by going into the field of labor. The lay brethren can labor efficiently, and now is the time.

Let those who desire a protracted effort to save men from death, make their wants known, and the protracted meeting committee will do the best they can to supply your needs.

Thine for action, L. BOUTELL.

UNDER THE PINE.

I have been spending a few days at the village of Quincy; it is only a few miles from Boston. When I first entered the streets, I noticed the picturesque beauty of the place. The most of the buildings are built after a modern style of architecture, but occasionally you will see a quaint and ancient looking house, whose history carries us back to the time when our grandfathers buckled on the armor and went forth to drive the invaders from the land which was so dear to them; for had they not left all the associations of a civilized country to take up their abode in the forests of the new world beyond the sea?

The people that lived then are fast becoming extinct; and a few more rising and setting suns, and the last one will have ended his journey, and be numbered with those that were, but are not.

As I sit beneath the waving branches of the mountain pines on this dark day, no wonder that my mind returns to the dark and shadowy past. But what of the present? "Watchman, what of the night?" Is peace proclaimed from sea to sea? No, not peace, but war. If the days were dark a hundred years ago, oh, how black they are now. We seem to hear from across the broad Atlantic's waves, the heavy tread of armies marshaling for the deadly fray.

Men are crying peace, but the Almighty has spoken, by his holy prophets, saying, that when men cry peace, peace, then shall sudden destruction come.

But, watchman, what of the night? Is the morning near? Yes, the morn of an eternal day is just breaking, when peace shall fill the earth, and sin and war shall come no more to mar the beauty of the glorious new made earth.

Is it real, or is it a fancy that we shall live and die no more? As real as earth is real, as true as holy writ. "For behold, I create a new heavens and a new earth, and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind. . . . . And they shall build houses and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them. . . . . They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord." J. S. W.

Saturday. Met as adjourned, E. McCullock in the chair. Minutes of previous session read and accepted. Conference proceeded to consider the proposition of D. C. Jefferson, which resulted in the following resolutions by G. W. Stetson:

1. That the Chair appoint a standing committee of one or more from each church represented, and also from those interested which are not represented, to solicit pledges for specified amounts, to put two men into the missionary work in Ohio, to go with the tent.

2. The committee, at the end of three months, shall report to the president of this conference their success, and if sufficient is pledged to justify, he shall notify D. C. Jefferson, who shall have the tent ready by the first day of June, 1871; which shall be kept in the field during the season.

Adjourned to the call of the Board.

W. F. JEFFERSON, Sec.

The church here have completed their house at a cost of about $6500, and were in debt about $1850. Sunday morning enough money was pledged to cover the indebtedness, and in the afternoon the dedicatory sermon was preached by H. G. McCullock, of Ill. Text, 2 Chron. 7: 16. We had a good meeting throughout the whole session of the conference, especially in love-feast Sunday morning. Aged and young all testified of the goodness of God and their glorious hope, and went home firm in the faith, determined to be found faithful of the Lord at his appearing and kingdom. Pray for us, brethren, that our undertaking be not fruitless, but rather that the church in Ohio may be strengthened and saved. The perishing are all around us, and we need the co-operation of all God's people in Ohio, and elsewhere, in this great work. Come to the rescue, and fight manfully the battles of the Lord, for the day hasteth greatly, when our labors will be over, and our works will be tried. W. F. J.

COME TO HIM!

O, who can describe the goodness of God? Such wonderful love as he bestows upon the children of men. Poor, sinful creatures that we are, even while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. And how tenderly our heavenly Father watches over us, guarding us from all the sins of the world. Yes, under the shadow of his protecting wing we are safe. What a blessed shelter for the weary traveler, beneath the rock Christ Jesus. Here we are safely sheltered from all the storms and ills of life, all those who will believe. Would that more would come to this glorious ark of safety.

O, sin-sick soul, come to Jesus! Do not waste these moments that are hastening you on so fast towards the judgment, by feasting on the vain and foolish pleasures of this world. In Christ you will find pleasures that are lasting, even life forevermore. How satisfying to the soul are the pleasures that we find in serving Christ. O be wise and seek Christ now, ere it be everlastingly too late. You have no promise of to-morrow. Then seek him to-day. To-day is the accepted time. The door of mercy now stands open wide, and all who will may enter.

LAZY ATITUDE IN PRAYER.

Posture in prayer is of some account. Standing, kneeling, and prostrate, are all mentioned in the Bible. A modern invention adds to those of Scripture authority sitting in the pews. This we are far enough behind the spirit of the age to consider unbecoming and irreverent. It is a city habit mainly. But you will find here and there in country churches, where the old devout habits can at all be broken in upon, the city style is copied by a select few.

We have noticed elders and deacons and their families act thus irreverently, and set this unbecoming example. It is disrespectful to the congregation and to God. It wears a lazy look. It is not crucifying the flesh. It is not worshiping God with the body and spirit, which are his.

Prostrate may do in the closet, and sitting in the invalid's chair, but it is unbecoming in the congregation. Lying in bed to say prayers, is as lazy and inexcusable as to sit in time of prayers during public worship. When the congregation kneels, then all devout persons should kneel. When the posture is standing, then it is a mark of disrespect, if nothing worse, to sit still in the pew.

In prayer meetings and special acts of humiliation, kneeling is the custom in our churches. In ordinary public worship the standing posture is almost universal. There are a few of our congregations with which we have at times worshiped, where the theory of the custom is to kneel always in prayer and stand in singing.

This comes from surrounding influences. This theory is not put into practice; for while most all rise up to sing, few kneel in time of prayer. Nearly all sit bold, upright in their pews. It is copied from surrounding sects.

A minister of our church in one of those places, while attending a meeting in the western synod, was assigned to preach for the Baptists. He asked before services, "What is your posture in prayer?"

"Standing," was the reply of the Baptist deacon.

At the proper time the minister said, "Let us pray," expecting the congregation to rise. No one moving in the pews, he repeated, "Let us pray!" Two or three men arose to their feet.

Looking the congregation in the face, and indicating his request with a gesture of uplifted hands, again the minister challenged them with, "Let us pray!" That brought the congregation to their feet, and, we trust, taught them a good lesson.

In a Boston congregation of many hundreds assembled, with which we once worshiped, a committee of six, with us and the minister, represented the people before the Lord in the requested attitude of prayer, and a similar committee of four did the singing.

Let all things be done decently and in order. This requires all to join in the worship of the congregation, in united acts of divine service. When they sing, then sing; when they pray, then pray, in the attitude of the adopted custom.—Reformed Church Messenger.

PUNCTUATION POINTS.

Do you know the origin of the various punctuation points used by printers and writers? Greek literature was not punctuated until B. C. 365, and there was no space between the words.

The Romans at a later day put a kind of division between their words, thus—Publius. Scipio. Africanus. For some time after the invention of the art of printing arbitrary marks were used to divide sentences. Up to the end of the fifteenth century only the period, colon, and comma, had been introduced. The latter came into use latest, and was only a perpendicular line, proportionate to the length of the preceding letter. The colon is first found in the "Acts of English Worthies," published in 1550, and the semi-colon in "Hackluyt's Voyages," which appeared in 1599. The parenthesis was introduced during the sixteenth century. The marks of interrogation and admiration were introduced many years after.

To Aldus Manvitus, an eminent printer of the seventeenth century, we are indebted for the present form of the comma. He also laid down rules for its use.

Inverted commas (") were first used by Mons. Allemont, a French printer, and were intended by him to supersede the use of italic letters, and it is said the French printers now call them by that name. Some English printers have used italic to denote quoted matter. It is so done in a work entitled "The Art of English Poetry," printed in London in 1808.

It is not known by whom the dash and apostrophe were invented.

Italic letters were invented by a Roman, who set up a printing office in Venice, in 1596. Venetian was its first name; but not long after, it was dedicated to Italy, to prevent any dispute that might arise from other nations claiming a priority.

TRUE POLITENESS.

A very touching incident recently occurred in a Chicago horse car, going west on Randolph street. The car was crowded. Many were standing; among them an old man of perhaps seventy, whose appearance indicated great weariness. There were strong men sitting on either side; there were young men and boys; but no one offered the old man a seat. Presently a young and beautiful woman rose, and, with a winning smile, offered him her seat. He seemed bewildered, and refused; but she insisted with so much earnestness that he finally settled himself into her seat, while she took the place where he had stood.

This proceeding created such a sensation that the conductor pulled the bell and kindly inquired if anybody wanted to get out. A fat old gentleman, whose eyesight was rather dim, deliberately took out his spectacles, and having wiped them carefully, put them on his nose, and said: "Wonderful! wonderful! wonderful!" No less than four gentlemen sprang from their seats at the same moment, and offered them to the lady, but she politely declined.

After the lady had left the car, one gentleman remarked that he had never seen the like in his life, and that in all probability she was insane. Another said she was undoubtedly a stranger in Chicago. The conductor was interrogated as to whether she was a frequent passenger in the cars. He replied that she was not—that nothing of the kind had ever before occurred in the course of his experience as a conductor. A youthful dandy who had a seat next the lady said, with a twirl of his moustache, that it was "an awkward position for a man to be placed in," but he has spent his time since the event in riding up and down in the same car, and has offered his seat to no less than fifty-four elderly gentlemen. He has likewise invoked the muses in a poetical effusion of seventy-two stanzas "to the beautiful young woman," which he proposes to publish. —Chicago Paper.

BOIL IT DOWN.

Somebody makes the following excellent suggestions to newspaper correspondents and other writers:

Whatever you have to say, my friend,
Whether witty, or grave, or gay,
Condense as much as ever you can,
And say it in the readiest way;
And whether you write of rural affairs,
Or particular things in town,
Just take a word of friendly advice—
Boil it down.

For if you go spluttering over a page,
When a couple of lines would do,
Your butter is spread so much, you see,
That the bread looks plainly through;
So when you have a story to tell,
And would like a little renown,
To make quite sure of your wish, my friend,
Boil it down.

When writing an article for the press,
Whether prose or verse, just try
To utter your thoughts in the fewest words,
And let them be crisp and dry.
And when it is finished, and you suppose
It is done exactly brown,
Just look it over again, and then
Boil it down.

For editors do not like to print
An article lazily long,
And the general reader does not care
For a couple of yards of song.
So gather your wits in the smallest space,
If you'd win the author's crown,
And every time you write, my friend,
Boil it down.

☞ God did not take up the three Hebrews out of the furnace of fire, but he came down and walked with them in it. He did not remove Daniel from the den of lions; he sent his angel to close the mouths of the beasts. He did not, in answer to the prayer of Paul, remove the thorn in the flesh; but gave him sufficiency of grace to sustain him.

GOOD TEMPER.—No trait of character is more valuable than the possession of a good temper. Home can never be made happy without it. It is like flowers springing up in our pathway, reviving and cheering. Kind words and looks are the outward demonstration—patience and forbearance are the sentinels within.

PRONUNCIATION.—Dr. Blair says, in order to be fully understood, four requisites are necessary: first, a due degree of loudness of voice; second, distinctness; third, slowness; fourth, propriety of pronunciation.

DECLINE OF POPERY.

While it is not many in human affairs to rejoice overmuch at the downfall of an enemy, yet, the indications of revelation are very favorable that we may rejoice at the decline of error—false doctrine as represented by the church of Rome. The decree of the so-called Œcumenical (Universal) Council, declaring the ecclesiastical judgment and decrees of the Pope infallible, and the sudden and almost simultaneous withdrawal of the French troops from the city of Rome, mark it as a time worthy of the critical and watchful observation of all who rejoice in the truth. Dr. Cumming, a celebrated divine of London, noted for his eloquence and voluminous works on the second advent of our Savior, and the downfall of Rome, wrote the following prophecy, the end and fulfillment of which now seems near at hand. Fifteen years ago he says:

"At this moment the self-styled Vicar of Christ, the infallible head of Christendom, is supported by two crutches formed out of the bayonets of Austria upon his left, and the bayonets of France upon his right; and the instant that those bayonets are withdrawn, the last tramp of the retreating soldier will awake those crashes in the Vatican and St. Peter that will sound the death-knell of the papacy and all that are connected with it."

We can but say amen to this, and add—and all the systems of false church governments that have sprung from it.—Iuka (Miss.) Mirror.

CHRISTIAN NEWSPAPERS THE NEED OF THE TIMES.

Most of our Christian young men of ability who have received the advantages of a liberal education, deem themselves eligible to the sacred office of the gospel ministry.

But there is a profession which more than all others, at the present time, calls for the consecrated talent of our Christian young men; a profession which wields the mightiest engine that exerts its force upon society—THE PRESS.

The preacher esteems himself fortunate if he can gain the attention of his hearers for an hour, at the most two, for one day in the week; while a man would rather go without his dinner sooner than forego the reading of his daily paper, and its opinion in nine cases out of ten he will make his own.

Is our daily press Christian? Alas! there is no need of asking the question. While all by the force of Christian public sentiment are compelled to make a show of respect to the institutions and truths of Christianity, we must confess that they are not conducted upon Christian principles.

How many papers, for the greed of grain, pander to the lowest tastes and vilest passions of men by inserting minute details of crime, and immoral advertisements? How many are too virtuous to be bought and owned by a whiskey ring, a stock corner, or a railroad king? How many place party before principle, expediency before duty? And those that are moral and just are sadly wanting in that enthusiasm for the right which is needed for a teacher of the people.

What we need are fearless, independent, Christian papers, able, enterprising, true to the right, aiming to form the public mind to proper opinions on social, moral, and political topics, breathing the spirit of the gospel, alive to the advancement of education, science, morality and pure religion. Such a paper ought to, and certainly will prosper, for the cause of Christ and of humanity needs it.—Boston News.

☞ If you can, cultivate the song-gift, and it will often help you to sing away trouble. When the melancholy Melancthon came to Luther with his troubles, the sturdy reformer would bear it patiently for a while, and then spring to his feet and say, "Come, come, let us sing the forty-sixth Psalm." By the time it was ended, they were ready to sit down peacefully and happily. What an anchor to storm-tossed souls that first verse has been for ages! There is nothing to bear the heart up, in great troubles or small, like God's word. Every christian has his "illuminated verses," which shine out in the darkest night. Multiply these verses, and you will multiply your joys and comforts.

Blessed night, when first that plain
Echoed with the joyful strain,
"Peace has come to earth again."
Happy shepherds! on whose ear
Fell the tidings glad and dear,
"God to men is drawing near."

A POOR YARDSTICK.—He who measures other men by himself, uses a very poor yard stick. He being somewhat crooked, is of necessity a few inches shorter than the accepted yard; so therefore, that which he measures he does not take the true measure of. Look out for such yardsticks, for they are crooked, or stretched out too long, or they would not use themselves for such a purpose.

MORE MUSCLE FOR WOMAN.

The customs of society, the occupations of females to a great extent, and popular prejudices, are unfavorable to the physical culture of women. . . . .

Woman has muscles and she has a right to use them in a proper manner. They were given her for a good purpose, and there is no reason why she should ignore them or be ashamed to develop them. What if the great source of joy, light, and heat, the sun, should leave his seal of approbation on her brow, as she rejoices in his glad presence, inspiring the mountain air, vivified by his healing beams? What if she roams over hills, "catching a sunrise" on their craggy peaks, through the smiling glades, plucking the beautiful flowers, looking through Nature up to Nature's God, or in her rambles, is pleased to run, leap, frolic, and rejoice in freedom, developing, strengthening her hundreds of muscles, giving them hardness and firmness? Such exercise and such breathing of God's pure air, will benefit her as much as her coarser brother, and she needs it as much. . . . . What if she should walk to church or on errands of mercy, to the distance of one, two, three, or more miles? She need not be ashamed of it, since such efforts will impart just the vivacity, suppleness, stamina, and endurance that she will need as she assumes the duties of maternity. . . . .

Woman's employments are too often unfavorable to the development of muscular power, and the consequent strengthening of powers of health. There is not sufficient play of muscular action. Many of her avocations, under existing circumstances, demand a sitting posture and fixedness of position. Sewing, for example, will bring into exercise but few of the nearly five hundred muscles of the body, the exercise of the few requiring comparatively little effort. The posture while sitting is almost equivalent to binding the muscles with strong bands, positively preventing freedom of movements.

This posture is especially unfavorable in its effects upon the stomach, heart, liver, etc., resulting almost necessarily in some form of dyspepsia, liver complaint, or supposed derangement of the heart, which, oftener than otherwise, is but a stomach derangement, the sympathy of one with the other. The stomach is a very important organ, and exerts a potent influence, by sympathy, over the heart, liver, brain, etc. These employments are precisely calculated to cramp its movements, actually and positively preventing a certain movement necessary to healthy digestion. Hence, the headaches, the palpitation of the heart, the "sinking at the pit of the stomach," the constipation, of the bowels, the indigestion, the "wind in the stomach," etc., resulting as naturally from these conditions as effects ever succeed causes. The same remarks apply to other employments, those demanding but little effort, little movement, not enough to circulate the blood, not enough to impart energy or secure vigor.

Woman needs a greater variety of employments, a wider range. It is true that ordinary "housework" affords quite a range, but there are comparatively few of the young ladies who are willing to engage in this highly useful and appropriate avocation, though, unquestionably, it is far better for the health than most of those sought by them. . . . Those whose avocations are of a sedentary character, would be materially benefited by a frequent brisk walk or run even, some effort calculated to improve the circulation of the blood, a matter of the utmost importance. This circulation is also very much improved by surface friction with a crash towel, flesh brush, or even the hand, such action being a kind of substitute for exercise, both being preferable to either alone.

Again, gardening is a very appropriate employment for females. It will prove an advantage even to the ordinary housekeeper, who may often suppose that she has sufficient exercise. It is a change, and will rest the seamstress wonderfully. . . . . .

Is your blood poor? Purify it by full inspirations of God's pure air, and perspire, throwing off the impurities of the body in Nature's way, by active labor in caring for your garden, and you have a better remedy than sarsaparilla Have you a poor appetite? Take exercise first and you will be able to omit the "bitters." Are you weak? Use your muscles properly, nor over-laboring, exercising and then resting, the only manner in which we can safely add to our strength, and you will reap the reward. Take full, deep inspirations, freely using the "good things of God," air and sunlight, thankful for such a bountiful supply. —Herald of Health.

HINTS TO NIGHT-WATCHERS.

A person who is sick enough to need night-watchers needs rest, and quiet, and all the undisturbed repose he can get. If one or more persons are in the room reading, talking, or whispering, as is often the case, this is impossible. There should be no light burning in the room unless it be a very dim one, so placed as to be out of sight of the patient. Kerosene oil should never be used in the sick room. The attendant should quietly sit or lie in the same room, or, what is usually better, in an adjoining room, so as to be within call if anything is wanted. In extreme cases, the attendant can frequently step quietly to the bedside to see if the patient is doing well, but all noise and light should be carefully excluded. It is a common practice to waken patients occasionally for fear they will sleep too soundly. This should never be done. Sleep is one of the greatest needs of the sick, and there is no danger of their getting too much of it. All evacuations should be removed at once, and the air in the room kept pure and sweet by thorough ventilation.—Herald of Health.

TIDE MARKS.

It was low tide when we went down to Bristol, and the great gray rocks stood up, bare and grim, above the water; but high up, on all their sides, was a black line that seemed hardly dry, though it was far above the water.

"What makes that black mark on the rocks?" I asked of my friend.

"Oh, that is the tide mark," she replied. "Every day, when the tide comes in, the water rises and rises, until it reaches that line; in a great many years it has worn away the stone till the mark is cut into the rock."

"Oh," thought I, "that is all, is it;" Well, I have seen a great many people who carried tide marks on their faces. Right in front of me was a pretty little girl, with delicate features and pleasant blue eyes. But she had some queer little marks on her forehead, and I wondered how they came to be there, until presently her mother said:

"Shut the blind now, Carrie; the sun shines right in baby's face."

"I want to look out," said Carrie, in a very peevish voice.

But her mother insisted, and Carrie shut the blind and turned her face away from the window. Oh dear me! what a face it was! the blue eyes were full of frowns instead of smiles, the pleasant lips were drawn up in an ugly pout, and the queer little marks on her forehead had deepened into actual wrinkles.

"Poor little girl!" thought I; "how bad you will feel when you grow up, to have your face all marked over with the tide marks of passion!" for these evil tempers leave their marks just as surely as the ocean does; and I have seen many a face stamped so deeply with self-will and covetousness that it must carry the marks to the grave.

Take care, little folks; and whenever you give way to bad temper, remember the "tide marks."—Children's Hour.

LIKE JESUS.

A dear little girl, only six years old, was promised by a friend, who kept a number of fowls, some feathers for her doll's hat. The next time the friend called, she brought with her not only several feathers, but also some beautiful patches out of which to make dresses for her doll. When the friend had gone away, the little girl, who was very glad and grateful for her presents, said to her mamma,—

"Mamma, do you know what I have been thinking about?"

"No, my dear."

"I've been thinking Mrs. Bell is like Jesus; for she gave me more than she promised."

Was not that a sweet saying for so young a girl? She had found out that the grace of the Lord Jesus is exceedingly abundant, and that he gives to them that trust in him exceeding abundantly above all they ask or think.—Children's Friend.

A LITTLE SERMON.

"See here, Puss! Papa's arms are strong." Now Puss was a little blue-eyed girl, about three years old. Her real name was Helene. She had started to find her mother, who was in a lower room and had become discouraged on the long stairway, when about six steps from the bottom. Coming through the hall, I reached the foot of the stairs before she saw me, held out my arms and said: "See here, Puss. Papa's arms are strong." As quick as thought, almost, she sprang to her feet and leaped from the stair. I caught her in my arms safely and bore her away to her mother. The moment she saw my outstretched arms she trusted me and was happy.

Children, life is full of discouragements. It is a stairway down which you are going to the grave. Jesus stands at the foot with outstretched arms. Trust him and you will be happy. Love him and trust him and he will bear you through life into heaven.—Bright Side.

"THY WILL BE DONE."

"Lucy," said a friend one day to a little girl who was laid on a sick-bed, "would you not like to be well, and again at play?"

Lucy thought for a moment, and then said with great sweetness, "God knows best; and what he thinks best pleases me best."

☞ A poor, wild Irish boy, taught in a mission school in Ireland, was asked what was meant by saving faith. He replied, "Grasping Christ with the heart."

"AT THE DOOR."

A joyful cry is ringing
O'er earth, from shore to shore,
Our glorious King is coming,
E'en now is at the door.

I can almost hear the echo
Of his footsteps drawing near,
And the songs of waiting millions
Sweetly falling on my ear.

I rise and go to meet him,
While my heart with joy beats high,
And I hail the glorious tokens
In the far off eastern sky,

That tell the dawn is nearing,
Of the bright effulgent day,
When the Sun of righteousness
Will drive each shade away.

Oh, haste to bid Him welcome!
Open every portal wide,
That the Bridegroom King may enter
To receive his promised bride;

For she is making ready,
In her robe of spotless white,
Watching, praying, weeping,
Till her Bridegroom heaves in sight.

Then we'll enter to the marriage,
And at the feast sit down,
While Christ will gird and serve us,
In unending glory crowned.

Then we'll lift our heads rejoicing,
Earth's night is almost o'er;
The kingdom soon is coming,
Even now is at the door.

THE YEAR-DAY SYSTEM.

In a number of the Crisis of the current year, I find an article or extract from an English work against the year-day system; but I take it for granted that the ideas presented therein are not fully endorsed by the Crisis, because, as I think, those ideas are subversive of much that is held dear by the Advent people. I do not offer this as a reason why the ideas are not correct; for all beliefs and all people must be judged by the truth, while the truth should be judged by no man. Will you permit me to present to your readers a few reasons why I believe the year-day system is correct?

1. It is claimed by opposers of this system that when God says days he means days, and it is a serious offence to assert that he means any thing else. This raises the question, Are there any symbols or figures in prophecy? for if every word in prophecy is to be taken according to its obvious import, or first meaning, then there can be no symbols nor figures. But if these are symbols, the reason urged above against the year-day system is not valid, unless it can be shown that time is never used representatively. But facts show that time is so used, and is therefore justly considered a part of the symbolic system of prophecy.

2. It is urged that Num. 14: 34, and Ezk. 4: 6, tell against the year-day theory, showing that when God intended that a day should represent a year, he expressly told them so. But these texts do show that a day is sometimes used to represent a year. Now we inquire, Is it true that, in the prophecies, a term used symbolically is always explained? Or, is it explained in one or more cases, leaving us to make use of the explanation in other cases? That the latter is correct is easily shown. In the book of Revelation the words "beast" and "horn" are not once said to mean powers or kingdoms. Why not affirm that God there means what he says, when he says horn he means horn, and not kingdom? True, a horn is explained to mean a king or kingdom in Dan. 7 and 8. But this, according to the opposers of the year-day theory, proves that a horn does not mean a kingdom in Revelation, because it shows that when God intended that a horn should be taken for a kingdom, "he did expressly make it known to his servants!" But is this just reasoning? No more than it would be to assert that the multiplication table was not designed for general use because it was found only on one page of the arithmetic. No reason can be given why we should not apply the same rule to the explanation of time in the prophecies that we do to that of the beasts and horns.

3. It is urged that they who apply the year-day theory to Daniel 9, are guilty of suppressing the truth, to wit, "that the weeks of Daniel are not ordinary weeks, but simply hebdomads, i. e., periods of seven, and might be hours, or days, or months, or years, or centuries, or any other division of time. The event only could decide which, and the event has shown them to be hebdomads of years." I present thus fully the objection because of the importance of this text in the investigation of this subject. And I think the accusation of suppression is quite unjust, for these reasons:

(1.) If it be true that the term used is simply a hebdomad, without qualification, it is then true that it is properly translated week, and the common definition of week must be applied to it. The idea of "hebdomad" is derived from the common cycle of a week of seven days, and applies to this only unless it is qualified. Thus, the definition of "hebdomedal" is "weekly," and the word week without qualification always applies to the period of seven days—not seven hours, nor seven months, nor seven years, nor seven centuries.

(2.) Dan. 9: 20–27, is the explanation of a vision recorded in Daniel 8; and the seventy weeks of chapter 9 are a part ("cut off") of a period given in the vision of chapter 8, to wit, two thousand and three hundred days. But if the event has shown the seventy weeks to be hebdomads, or weeks of years, it is thereby proved that the longer period of days of which these weeks are a part, is a period of years; that is, it is composed of year-days. And this establishes the correctness of the year-day system, showing that days do mean years in the prophecy, even where it is not "expressly made known."

(3.) If these reasons did not exist, it would not be just to accuse the advocates of the year-day system of suppressing or perverting, unless it can be shown that the term is never elsewhere rendered week, or that it is never used for a period of seven days where no qualification is annexed. But this, I presume, will not be asserted.

4. The periods of days in prophecy are so connected with the symbols, that we find it necessary to consider them year-days. Thus, the period of time, times, and a half, is the same as a thousand two hundred and threescore days, in Rev. 12. I think no one will dispute that the same facts and events are represented by Dan. 7: 17–26, that are represented by Rev. 14: 1–10. And the time, times, and dividing of time in Daniel, is the same as the forty-two months in Revelation. But time, times and a half, is shown to be twelve hundred and sixty days; and forty-two months—forty-two thirties—make the same number of days. And a month is used as a period of thirty days, not of thirty hours, or years. But the event as clearly proves that these are days and months of years, as the event proves that the hebdomads or weeks of Daniel 9, are years.

To illustrate our point. If, in describing a certain person, it is said he was in the army five years, we should never think of proving identity by applying it to a man who had been in the army fifty years. So if it be said of a certain power that it had power to make war or wear out the saints three and a half literal years, it would be absurd to apply it to a government which had that power more than a thousand years. And thus it is clearly shown that if these days and months are literal days, not year-days, then it is absurd to apply these parts of the prophecies of Daniel and Revelation to the Roman power, either pagan or papal. But the succession established by the explanations given in the prophecy of Daniel, proves that they do refer to the Roman power, and the days are thereby proved to be year-days.

And now I think all will see that the remark is just, that whatever breaks down the year-day system, subverts the Advent faith. For, if the days are literal, the Roman power is not brought into the prophecy; and if so, we have no chain of prophecy reaching down to the present age, either of symbols, of powers, or prophetic periods; and then, of course, all the arguments of Adventists are fallacies. But, on the other hand, if the days of the prophecies are year-days, as I think is clear truth, then the chain of symbols reaches to our time, and the Second Advent movement is the work of God. J. H. WAGGONER.

JOY IN GOD.

McCheyne, in a sermon on the text, "We joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ," says, "This is the third heaven of the believer's privilege." There are flowers which always turn their faces to the sun. The storm may make them droop for a little, but still they point to the source of their life. So should the believer, whether his sky be clear or overcast, ever look toward his God. Who can tell the holy joy which is thus poured into his cup? When he goes forth to his morning toil, the sunlight of the divine countenance is shed over all his paths. And when he comes home from the fatigues of the day, it is to dwell in calm delight on the sum of God's mercies. "If I should count them, they are more than can be numbered."

The attributes of God are all joy to the believer. He can rejoice in God's omniscience. To know that all my sins are known to him, brings assurance that the Savior he provides meets all my need. As the sick man is glad when the physician perfectly understands his disease, so I am glad that God knows all the corruptions of my heart, because he will perfect his strength in my weakness, so that as my day is, my strength will be.

To the unregenerate the almightiness of God should be terrible. They may profess to be filled with admiration of Jehovah's power as they gaze upon the foaming cataract or listen to his thunder rending the heavens. They watch the sun's eclipse with no thought of the time when the sun shall be darkened and the moon shall not give her light. But what doleful cries of terror and despair would fill the air if they saw the almightiness of Jehovah ready to be let loose upon them; if they could but see that the same hand which balances the earth upon nothing, the hand that wields the thunderbolt and darkens the sun, is pledged to destroy every Christless soul. Wrath is terrible in proportion to the might of the being who is angry; you smile at the harmless anger of a child, you would tremble before the rage of a lion. "The wrath of the king is terrible;" what must it be to fall into the hands of the living God? Who can tell the dreadfulness of being trodden in the wine-press of the fierceness of the wrath of Almighty God? But the believer exults in the thought of abiding under the shadow of the Almighty. "I will say of Jehovah, he is my refuge and my fortress; my God; in him will I trust."

To the Christless the justice of God is terrible, and they endeavor to conceal it under representations of a leniency which looks with compassion on their sins, or a majesty which overlooks them. God himself has declared that he will by no means clear the guilty, and that heaven and earth shall pass away sooner than one jot or tittle of his law shall be annulled. Yet the believer rejoices in the justice of God, because in Christ he is made the righteousness of God. The heavens are not clean in his sight; but in Christ, the believer is clean every whit.

The sum of the reasons why the believer joys in God is, that God is love. He rejoices in God's past love. It is an everlasting love which chose him, called him, sought him, saved him when he was an enemy, a sinner, a child of wrath. He rejoices in God's present love, abiding under the beams of his reconciled countenance. There is an inexpressible joy in the thought of being accepted in the Beloved, and that God has all the glory of our salvation, that his honor shines most illustrious in the salvation of sinners. This acceptance cannot be forfeited; he who has begun the work will finish it. The believer rejoices in the future and unchanging love of God. If his love is so precious to us here that ofttimes the wilderness blossoms as the rose, what will it be when he brings us home and his fulness of love flows out to us unhindered? But, after all, we can only say of it, "It passeth knowledge," and eternity will only make this more evident.—The Witness.

For the World's Crisis.

A PROMISE FULFILLED.

At a certain time in the history of David, he said in his heart, "I shall now perish one day by the hand of Saul"; and in order to escape from his enemy, he resolved to go over into the country of the Philistines, and abide there. "So David arose, and the six hundred men that were with him, and passed over unto Achish, king of Gath. And David dwelt in the land of the Philistines [in the village of Ziklag] "a full year and four months." And the king showed great favor to David, and gave him a position in the army, and said to him, "Know thou assuredly, that thou shalt go out with me to battle, thou and thy men."

So David went with the king of the Philistines, when the army marched to fight against the Israelites. But the princes of the Philistines were afraid that David would turn against them, and they would not consent to have him go with them to the battle. So David and his men returned to their place, after being absent three days. When they arrived home, they found their houses burned, and all they possessed was gone. Their wives and their children had been carried away captive. "Then David and the people that were with him lifted up their voice and wept, until they had no more power to weep." Then David inquired of the Lord, saying, "Shall I pursue after this troop? shall I overtake them? And he answered him, Pursue; for thou shalt surely overtake them, and without fail recover all." This is the promise. It is recorded in 1 Sam. 3: 8. So David pursued the enemy, and the result is told in the 18th and 19th verses of the same chapter. "And there was nothing lacking to them, neither small nor great, neither sons nor daughters, neither spoil, nor anything that they had taken to them; David recovered all." This rescue seems very wonderful in its completeness, and must be counted as a miracle.

And does not this suggest to your mind the invasion of this world by the old adversary, and the carrying captive all the people? and even the burning is yet to find its counterpart in the final conflagration. But David, in the narrative before us, rescued the captives; and so the Son of David will rescue from death (and from him that had the power of death) all that are carried captive into the land of the enemy. His victory over death and hell and every enemy is complete. Everything that the Amalekites carried away was recovered, "and there was nothing lacking to them." (I had no intention of applying this to the doctrine of a general resurrection, but some may see a possibility of such an application. My aim was to show the completeness of the work of salvation to the saints alone.)

The words "none of them is lost," evidently has a wide application, covering all the redeemed. No one will be lost that is worth saving. And a great number will be saved that do not feel worthy, but Jesus saves to the uttermost all that come unto God by him.

The fulfillment of one promise made to David, is but a type of the complete fulfillment of all the promises left on record for the people of God. Let this thought encourage and cheer the desponding and the afflicted. Joshua said, "There failed not aught of any good thing which the Lord had spoken unto the house of Israel; all came to pass." Soon we can say, "All that was promised to us has been fulfilled; not one promise has failed, but all has come to pass." And this is the promise that is made to us—even the promise of immortality—eternal life. This is the result of salvation, complete, deliverance from sin and its evil consequences.

Webster, Mass. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

BROTHERLY LOVE.—"As the spokes of a carriage-wheel approach their centre, they approach each other; so, also, when men are brought to Jesus Christ, the centre of life and hope, they are drawn towards each other in brotherly relationship, and stand side by side journeying to their heavenly home."—Rev. J. F. Sargent.

THE NEW JERUSALEM.

We read concerning "Jerusalem which is above" (Gal. 4: 26), that Abraham looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God" (Heb. 11: 11); "the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem" (Heb. 12: 22); "for here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come" (Heb. 13: 14); "the city of my God, which is New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God."—Rev. 3: 12. That this is a real city, instead of being a mere symbol of the church, is evident:

1. Because this city was in heaven over 1800 years ago, which is not true of the church, because only a small part of the church had then come into existence. 2. Because no part of the church is in heaven. 3. Because Abraham's two women are presented by Paul as an "allegory," representing the two Jerusalems—the bond woman representing "Jerusalem that now is, and is in bondage with her children," and the free woman representing "Jerusalem which is above." As the bond woman symbolized a literal city, so must the free woman symbolize a literal city—literal New Jerusalem.

4. It cannot be that Paul meant to teach "here we have no continuing church, but we seek one to come," and affirming at the same time "He hath prepared for them a church." Heb. 11: 16. But this could be truthfully affirmed of a literal city in heaven, hereafter to come down to earth.

5. It could not be said, "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may . . . enter in through the gates into the church" (Rev. 22: 14), which would be tantamount to saying that the church should enter into the church.

6. Nor can we conceive of a church with "gates," "walls," etc., to be measured by "furlongs" and "cubits," having "height," "length" and "breadth," all of which can be true of a literal city.

7. "The nations of them that are saved shall walk in the light of it," and though they are the church in its glorified state, they are not the city. Hence, the city is not a symbol of the church, either in this dispensation or the next.

The saints will never tire in gazing upon the fadeless glories of this magnificent city—the scene will never become monotonous, for its measurement is twelve thousand furlongs. If this means the measurement of each side of the city, instead of the measurement around the whole, allowing streets as in ordinary cities, a traveler would have to spend over seven years to get a glimpse of one mansion of the city, at the rate of thirty miles per day; but as there are "many mansions," one above another, if we allow that they are one mile apart, it would take a traveler, at the same rate, about ten thousand five hundred years to pass through the streets of the entire city. At railroad speed, thirty miles per hour, without stopping day or night, it would require about forty-five years.

Glorious city of God! The saints will never be ashamed of it. Glorious company there, all joyous, none sorrowful. To walk with angels through those streets, to greet and converse with prophets there, to meet and talk with friends that now sleep in death, to listen to the sweet songs of the angels, and then to think this scene is of eternal duration, will be so exhilarating that only immortality could endure the heavenly rapture. May we be there. W. S.

For the World's Crisis.

"EVERLASTING LIFE."

Dear Christian Friends:—Never do I take pen in hand to write a line for the Crisis, or any other widely circulating messenger to thousands, but that I feel the great importance of writing true sentiments, and of writing as in the presence of the Lord of glory, to whose people it is addressed.

Everlasting life, words so often spoken, they sometimes lose their glorious meaning. O, what a word is life! full of freshness and music, and colorings of nameless brightness. It comprehends all that gives us pleasure. It is the existence of the creations of God, and is the activity and strength and beauty of city and country. Against this cherished life is ever warring decay and death, much of which is the result of transgression and evils known, but not forsaken.

Our Father in heaven, in his perfect wisdom and love, has given us a guide, a lamp, to make plain all the pathways of life, that we may be made perfect in holiness and happiness. During these autumnal days, our eyes have looked upon the richness of harvest blessings, and to-day we still look on the beauties of forest and field, and our hearts beat warm with thanksgivings and praises; and we are fed by these good gifts. With what earnestness should we cry Life, life, eternal life! and seek it in all "his appointed ways," and receive every good gift, every religious social privilege, every sacred social relation and friendship, with sincere thanksgivings. Let us forsake every evil way, and ever keep in the counsel of the incorruptible word of God, that alone will inspire our lives with faith, and hope, and love.

Ah! how many of the dwellers in city and country turn away in unbelief, and seek only those things that perish with the using, and return not to give glory to the Author of every good gift. O that it were the language of every heart, like the "sweet singer of Israel," to delight in "praises," with voice and heart, upon the organ and the harp; yea, let every thing that hath breath "praise the Lord!"

"Everlasting life" is the purpose of our Father in heaven. Let us bless him again and again. Let us seek the sunshine of existence, and no more dwell among the shadows of gloom. Forever press onward.

Son or daughter of grief or discouragement, life is before thee. Embrace the gift. Turn not timidly away from life's blessings, for therein is the preparation of a future and more blessed existence.

O Zion, "arise and shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord hath risen upon thee." "The Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of its rising." He, the Lord, whose glory fills the heavens, and whose is the fulness of the earth, and they that dwell therein, will neither faint nor be weary until he has accomplished his purposes of "eternal life" and "glory"; and when the kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ, then shall be brought to pass the saying—"Death is swallowed up in victory." "There shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain."

And to us are the "wells of salvation" freely given, to drink from constantly—his holy Word, his holy works. And the Spirit and the bride say, Come, and partake of the waters of "life" freely. P. M. EATON.

DO ALL IN THE NAME OF THE LORD JESUS.

O, Jesus, I am thine,
To do "in word and deed," for thy dear name,
Whatever thou may'st ask, without reward or fame;
Nor will I at my lot repine.
Could I but win thy favor from that blessed shore,
In which thou reignest now and evermore,
Or hear thee speak at last, "Well done!"
I could bear all things 'neath the shining sun.

O, Jesus, brother, friend,
All names of worth are thine; thou art the first
To own and to approve them, and givest them in trust
To us, to account for in the end.
May I possess thy Spirit, and in faith and love
Thy bright example follow and approve.
Where'er thou leadest go, nor fear
To do thy work, since thou art ever near.

MEDITATION 92.

The glorious fruits of sanctified affliction.

Two things render affliction either easy or intolerable, to wit, its kind, and continuance. If it be ponderous and crushing, and withal continual; this makes affliction break all the bones, and wound the very spirits. But when it is light and over in a moment, which is the case with all the afflictions that befal the sons of God, I wonder why or how I can complain. But how astonishing beyond expression must it be, that this light and transitory load of affliction should work for me a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory!

Truly I have no reason to cry out of my troubles and trials, since they work more good for me than now I can conceive. And little do I think, while grappling with my afflictions and fears, what they are procuring for me in the highest heavens; God having so connected the seed-time of tears with the harvest of glory, that they who sow weeping, shall reap with everlasting joy. Would I grudge to carry a stone for a day or two, if assured that when I laid it down, I should receive a crown of gold? Why then repine under my afflictions?

But, again, what proportion is there between the cross and the crown, the trial and the triumph, the affliction and the comfort, the burden of grief and the exceeding weight of glory? No more than between the glorious Giver and glorified receiver. Here our afflictions own the creature as the instrument, and sometimes have their origin in imagination; here they are light, and they are transitory; but the glory above is massy and weighty, is permanent and eternal, and is the immediate gift of God, neither by nor from the creature.

Moreover, affliction works for our good, even here: For (1.) To the saints, it bears, as it were, its own reward in its bosom, yielding to all that are rightly exercised therewith, the peaceable fruits of righteousness. It deadens the pleasures of sense, and gives the soul a relish for spiritual things; yea, it divorces the soul from the creature, and draws it near to God. (2.) There is no proportion between all that can befal the saints in this state, and that joy wherewith they shall be comforted in the better life. In none of the sons of men do all afflictions meet at one and the same time; Job's case came nearest it, but at all times he had the exercise of his reason, and the testimony of a good conscience, with an invincible faith in God, which made him conquer even while he seemed to fall. The afflictions, then, of saints, are verily light; but their future glory is a weight filling every power, replenishing every faculty, overflowing the whole soul, satisfying every desire. Now, in all the sons of God, the heirs of glory, every heavenly gift, every blessing of love, every degree of felicity, every beam of glory, centers, meets, and rests for ever. Therefore, there is no proportion between their sufferings and their consolation. (3.) Affliction is of no continuance; the apostle elegantly expresses it by a moment, which of all times is the shortest. And indeed though the affliction was severe and very ponderous, yet this lightens it much, and that it is over and gone in a moment, no sooner felt than fled, to return no more; but the exceeding weight of glory, to screw up their felicity to the highest degree, is also eternal.

But some may think, how can affliction be thought either light, or but for a moment, since, for their part, it is all they can do to support under the pressure and weight of their many adversities? And as to their being over in a moment, they rather think with Heman, "that they are afflicted, and ready to die from their youth up;" or, with Asaph, that they are "plagued all the day long, and chastened every morning."

But, as to the first, no afflictions befal the saints that can destroy their frame, though they may dissolve the union between soul and body. Yea, though the outward man be crushed and seem ready to perish, yet it is to our advantage, for thereby the inward man is renewed day by day, and grows up in strength unto eternal glory. And this mitigation arises from the divine sympathy of Him, who in all their afflictions is afflicted. Moreover, how often does the joy that God pours into the soul, in the time of affliction, overbalance and downweigh all the sorrow that arises from them.

And, as to the second complaint, of continuance; as a moment bears no proportion to one's life, so our whole life bears no proportion to the eternity of glory which shall take place, when the hour-glass of time has not a sand left, and cannot be turned. A moment stays not, and when gone cannot be remembered; for even millions put together make but a duration, which, when past, is only like a tale that is told. Now, life consists of so many moments, therefore a moment bears some proportion to our life, though very small; but eternity is not composed of life-times or ages, therefore the whole life bears no proportion to eternity. That which endures but for a while may be divided into the smallest denomination, but what continues for ever cannot be broken down into numbers. Now, is it much to pass through the shallow stream of affliction, that can rise but to the ankles, in order to plunge into the pleasures of his right hand, which are a great river, even waters to swim in? Can any child of heaven quarrel with the kindness of God, who makes light and momentary affliction work for them a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory?

Take courage, then, my soul, and be strong; look into God's dealing with thee, for his ways can stand the strictest search, as through them all, even in the afflicting hand, fatherly kindness and eternal love shine forth. Now I see what I never saw before, that afflictions sanctified are indulgences, and trials the special gifts of heaven. And I do not wonder that all the saints are, I say not punished, but privileged with them, one kind or another; since they here keep sin low, and for them accumulate eternal weights of glory in the other world. My not looking into the ways of divine wisdom, and to the extent of the promises, has made me have very odd thoughts of afflictions: and, concluding them to be the signs of divine displeasure, I have been ready to question my interest in God, and difficulted how to understand the word of truth. But now I see, that though sometimes he sends afflictions to chastise his saints for sin, and curb their carnal affections, (and how kind is it thereby to punish sin, and prepare them for glory, and glory for them!) yet, that at other times he sends them to improve the soul, and exercise every grace in his saints. Why, then, do not I, like the great apostle of old, glory in tribulation, which, where grace is in exercise, sets all the wheels of the soul in motion; tribulation working patience; patience, experience; and experience hope; and hope, being no way ashamed to confess her confidence in him who has shed his love abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost, gives a heavenly boldness. Should I then be disconsalate, because some fogs dwell on the eye-lids of everlasting morn, which, when the sun arises, shall never more be seen? Should any shades in this early twilight give sorrow, which are to be swallowed up in the brightness of eternal noon? A little patience, and I am past every one of my troubles, and possessed of all the transports of perpetual day.

Even from the vastness of my affliction and sorrow here, solid joy may rise; for if affliction sometimes almost crush me, and I am sometimes like to fall under it, ought I not to consider, that this weight of glory shall far, very far, exceed the present burden? Now, if the one be so much, how much more, infinitely much more, will the other be! Yea, it shall be such, that were I not replenished with immortality, and upheld by the Most High, I should fall under the insupportable emanations of divine glory. But I shall be all might for that happy state, where, to my sweet experience, I shall learn that my light affliction, which was but for a moment, wrought for me a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.—Solitude Sweetened.

DIGNITY OF LABOR.

It would seem that employment, from the morning of creation, when God himself worked and rested, and when Adam was commanded to till the soil and subdue the animals, implies peculiar dignity and honor. The Maker of worlds blesses labor. It is apostolic, it is Christ-like, it is God-like to work. No system of education is complete that does not harden the hand and toughen the muscle, while it develops the intellect and enlarges the heart. The religion that shows nothing but pale cheeks and lily-white fingers is not the religion of the Bible. Highways and hedges are better sanctuaries for acceptable service than studies, and cloisters, and cells. Scars and knots on the hands are more honorable than rings and gloves. Bronze out of the sunbeams is more beautiful on the face than rouge out of the shops. Only a worker attains the true symmetry, strength, and glory of manhood or womanhood. Genius itself falters in a conflict with labor. Industry has the long end of the lever that moves public opinions, parties, congresses, and thrones.

It was men with brown faces and sinewy arms that built the pyramids on Egypt's plains, reared the temple on Mount Moriah, and walled the Holy City with adamant, circled an Asiatic empire with impenetrable granite, put arm in arm the old and the new worlds as whispering mother and daughter, spanned the American continent with a thoroughfare of iron from sea to sea, cut a canal for steamers in forty months across the desert sands where the Israelites wandered for forty years: it is men with sunburnt features and nerves of steel that to-day whiten the worlds wide waters with the sails of commerce, navigate all rivers, explore all lands, and subdue the earth as God at first commanded.

An idle man, however white, and soft, and smart, is not God's man.—Workday Christian, by Alexander Clark.

THE RAPIDS OF TIME.

While we delight to linger round the cross and to point all to the atoning death of our adorable Savior, we cannot be unmindful of the fact that his coming again in glory is uniformly presented in the Holy Scriptures as the hope of the church of God.

We have been long satisfied that the Second Advent is pre-millenial; in other words, that Christ will come again before the millenium; that there will be no golden age of universal righteousness and peace prior to his coming; that iniquity will abound, and the love of many wax cold, till the end; that the wheat and the tares will grow together till the harvest; that evil men and seducers will become worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived; and that as it was in the days of Noah ~~and Lot~~, so it will be at the coming of the Son of man.

We believe, too, that the present dispensation is nearing its close; that a voice will soon emanate from the throne, saying, "It is done," and Jesus will come in like manner as he was seen to go into heaven. The fulfillment of prophecy, the advanced age of the world, and the signs of the times, admonish us of this, and also of our duty to continue and increase our aid in swelling the note of warning which is being heard in all lands.

The reader may have stood by the Falls of Niagara. A short distance above the cataract the waters become very rapid; hence that part of the mighty stream is called "The Rapids." So it seems to us that we are in the rapids of time, and the cataract of eternity is just before us. The eye of enlightened faith sees it; the ear of faith hears its dreadful roar; and the voice of wisdom says, to all men everywhere, "Prepare to meet thy God." "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." "Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame."

Up, christian, up! the night is dark,
The contest fiercer grows;
Press onward, upward to the mark,
And bravely face your foes.

For the World's Crisis.

"REPENT YE; FOR THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN IS AT HAND."

The preaching that John the Baptist preached, immediately before the first advent of our Lord Jesus Christ, ought to be preached with greater earnestness and zeal, if possible, now, before the second coming of Him of whom it was said to the disciples, by the angels, "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." "Repent ye; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

The gospel dispensation issues three calls. The first is, "Come, for all things are now ready."

The second, "Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind." These two calls, I believe, are already past.

And the third and last call is ringing from the throne of God and over the earth to-day—"Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled." O how important it is, then, that the sound go loudly forth, "Repent ye; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

Fair Haven, Vt. MARTHA J. BRIGGS.

OLD TESTAMENT INCOMPLETENESS.

Dr. Walker, in his "Living Questions" takes about the same ground as "Ecce Homo" on this question, and says, in his incisive way: There has been constant evil done to the moral interests of men, by making the Old Testament and the New equal in precept and obligation. Servitude existed in a modified form in the darker dispensation. The dispensation of Moses greatly modified the dispensation of power in regard to servants. But the servitude and polygamy permitted by Moses are utterly at variance with the truth and love of the new dispensation. The slaves of "believing masters" were freed under the gospel; and even the slaves still "under the yoke," served for Christ's sake, "suffering wrongfully."

Hence, the effort to show that slavery, under the Old Testament, was in any wise applicable to the question under the New, was an error productive of immense evil, both south and north. Erroneous teaching on this subject hindered the progress of reformation both in Europe and in this country.

Such, likewise, is the case with the polygamy of the Old Testament. It is said that a Bible distributor made an effort to supply the Mormons. He was received gladly. They claimed that the Bible justified their practice. The distributor retired, disgusted, no doubt, with their heresy; but himself in the dark, so far that his error in appreciating the relations of the two dispensations prevented his correcting their false views of revelation.

Such, likewise, is the case, when Old Testament saints are made examples for New Testament practice. The Old Testament saints, as a general statement, would be New Testament sinners. Some of them, as David, sinned grossly, even in the light of their own dispensation. In that light it was declared by the Lord that the sword should never pass from David's house; and because he was a "man of blood," he was not permitted to build the house of the Lord. The effort to justify Old Testament character by the light of the gospel, has a baneful effect, in some cases, both upon minister and hearer.

LIBERAL OFFERS.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

We are anxious to have our paper reach several thousand new readers the coming year, and become a blessing to them. It is the best means we have of sowing the seed of the gospel of the kingdom in some hearts, and we should all awake, and do whatever we can to have its warnings of the coming judgment reach as many new readers as possible.

Some of our preachers have done nobly, and others would gladly help on the good cause, if they could receive aid for their families while they spend their time for the paper. For the benefit of such, the A. C. P. Society, at a recent meeting, by vote authorized the Agent to pay ten per cent to preachers on all collections for the Crisis and Young Pilgrim; and it is hoped they will take hold of the work in earnest, and have great success. Those who understand the expense of publishing a paper, know that it would cost no more to set up the type for twelve or fifteen thousand copies, than it does for a less number; hence, after our regular issue of about nine thousand copies is run off, we could print several thousand more at the cost only of press work and paper. It has, therefore, been concluded by the Editorial Committee and Business Agent, to whom the Society referred this subject, to make the following liberal offers to new subscribers, to induce them to form clubs, and thus make success easy to all who put forth efforts to obtain new subscribers.

TRIAL OFFER.

We will send the World's Crisis three months on trial, to new subscribers, for fifty cents. We ask our friends to obtain yearly subscriptions, if possible; but where subscribers can be obtained for only three months, please visit them again, and, if possible, get them to renew before their paper is stopped at the end of three months.

To aid in obtaining new subscribers for 1871, we make the following offer of nearly

Three Months Free.

We will send the Crisis—for the balance of this year, from the time the name is received—free to all new subscribers for 1871, sent in before Jan. 1st.—Rate $2.50.

Now is the time to subscribe, and put forth energetic efforts to obtain new subscribers.

CLUBBING WITH OTHER PAPERS.

As many persons take several papers, and could be induced to take the Crisis, if they could get two papers at club rates, we have accepted offers to club other papers with the Crisis, which will enable our friends to obtain subscribers where it would otherwise be impossible to introduce our paper.

If any of our regular subscribers wish any of the papers on the list at club rates, they can get new subscribers for the Crisis, as it is not necessary that both papers should be sent to the same address.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS THREE OR SIX MONTHS FREE.

We will send the World's Crisis six months, and the Phrenological Journal and Packard's Monthly (price $3.00) one year for $3.00; or the World's Crisis three months, with the Rural New Yorker (price $3.00) one year for $3.00; or, three months with the New York Weekly Tribune (price $2.00) one year for $2.00; or three months with the Bee-Keeper's Journal and National Agriculturist (price $1,00) one year for $1.00.

THE MISSION SOUTH.

Which shall we do? Which is best? to hire good halls in the principal cities south, and make a bold attack against the fables and traditions of these last days; or go into some small, cheap, out-of-the-way hall, in the corner of the city, where but few will come? We think there can be but one answer. If we get good halls, we must pay well for them. Will the brethren furnish the means? We purpose to leave for the South about the first of December.

CHICAGO.

The meetings in Chicago are seasons of special interest. They are heavenly feasts. The Spirit of the Most High pervades them, and causes the saints to rejoice. Sinners are coming to Christ, and backsliders are again seeking the narrow way. Dr. Manning, the Methodist minister who has been reclaimed, is doing well, and rejoicing in Christ. He knows how to go to work in the vineyard of the Lord. We shall be much disappointed if he does not become a very efficient preacher of the gospel of the kingdom. Pray for him.

Last Sabbath evening (Oct. 30th,) Bro. Walter, a Methodist preacher, who sat with us in the pulpit, and took a part in the exercises, remarked that a noted Presbyterian minister was at the late Methodist conference, in Janesville, Wis., and in a public manner went to the Methodist Bishop, and shook hands with him, saying, This is Presbyterianism shaking hands with Methodism in brotherly love. "Now," said Bro. Walter, extending his hand to us, "I wish to shake hands with you as a brother in Christ." The shake was a hearty one, and made quite a sensation in the audience. Some shed tears of joy at the sight. We felt the approval of God's Holy Spirit. Bro. Frankland, the pastor, has kindly offered us the use of his church for another Sabbath. A heavenly atmosphere pervades the meetings. Members of other churches are feasting with us, and say they never enjoyed such good meetings before. Praise the Lord.

THE BRODHEAD DISCUSSION.

Our discussion at Brodhead, Wis., Oct. 25th, 26th, 27th, and 28th, was one of special interest, and called out the leading men of the place. It is the residence of our corresponding Editor, and is a pleasant village of about three thousand inhabitants. We were much pleased with its appearance. The water is soft, the soil good, and sufficiently sandy to prevent much mud. We were also pleased with the people, and never enjoyed a discussion any better. Our opponent, Mr. Crawford, conducted the discussion in a gentlemanly manner. He is a lawyer, and a Universalist minister, of good ability, who has had many discussions. Mr. Mac, a distinguished lawyer, was our chairman, and presided in a superior manner.

Among the points discussed were the following: The punishment of the wicked, the immortality of the soul and the sleep of the dead; the personal coming of Christ, the resurrection of the dead; the kingdom, the new Jerusalem, the judgment, and universal salvation. Mr. C. claimed that the second coming of Christ was at the destruction of Jerusalem by the Roman armies, under the command of Titus, A. D. 70; that the judgment day was at the same time. He presented Isa. 45: 23–25 as infallible proof of universal salvation, saying he would rest his whole argument on that scripture, which reads as follows:—

"Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none else. I have sworn by myself, the word is gone out of my mouth in righteousness, and shall not return, that unto me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear. Surely, shall one say, In the Lord have I righteousness and strength; even to him shall men come; and all that are incensed against him shall be ashamed. In the Lord shall all the seed of Israel be justified, and shall glory."

We called his attention to the fact that verse 21 is conditional. If they do not "look" unto the Lord, there is no promise of salvation. His main proof of universal salvation was contained in the language, "Unto me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear." It appeared that he had overlooked the words in the next verse, which say: "And all that are incensed against him [the Lord] shall be ashamed."

This universal salvation is said to be in a resurrection state. But Paul says: "Whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed." (Rom. 9: 33); hence those who are ashamed of him are not among the believers. Jesus says: "Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, . . . of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels." Mark 8: 38. By applying Isa. 45: 23 to the resurrection state, our opponent had to admit that there and then was the judgment seat of Christ; for Paul says: "But why dost thou judge thy brother? or why dost thou set at nought thy brother? for we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ." Rom. 14: 10. How do you know, Paul? "For it is written, As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God. So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God." Rom. 14: 11, 12. Where is it written? In Isa. 45: 23. So the people are to stand before the judgment seat of Christ at the very time the bowing and confessing shall take place. We inquired if this was all accomplished at the destruction of Jerusalem one thousand eight hundred years ago?

We asked our opponent which horn of the dilemma he would take: that the coming of Christ, the judgment, and the great bowing, are future; or, that the universal salvation took place at the destruction of Jerusalem, where he assumed that Christ came the second time and judged the world? We received no reply.

The 25th verse of Isa. 45, afforded no proof that every Israelite would be saved; for they can be justified only upon the condition of faith and repentance. "All the seed of Israel" does not mean the whole Jewish nation. In 2 Kings 17: 18, we read: "Therefore the Lord was very angry with Israel, and removed them out of his sight; there was none left but the tribe of Judah only." "And the Lord rejected all the seed of Israel, and afflicted them, and delivered them into the hand of spoilers, until he had cast them out of his sight." 2 Kings, 17: 20. Thus it appears that "all the seed of Israel" does not necessarily mean more than all, or a majority of the Jews living at any one time. We came to the conclusion that our opponent's great proof text in Isa. 45: 22–25, on which he said he was willing to rest the whole argument, was a very weak support, and was even fatal to his position.

In relation to his assumption that Christ came the second time eighteen hundred years ago, when Titus destroyed Jerusalem, we called his attention to the reading of the Scripture with this interpretation in view, as follows: "Therefore be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not," Titus cometh. Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom" Titus "hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season? Blessed is that servant, whom" Titus "when he cometh, shall find so doing. Verily I say unto you, that" Titus "shall make him ruler over all his goods. But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart," Titus "delayeth his coming; and shall begin to smite his fellow-servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken," Titus "shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of." Matt. 24: 44–50. Instead of Titus' coming being unexpected to the Jews, like the coming of a thief in the night, they had a full knowledge of his coming some time before his arrival.

We then called the attention of our opponent to the parable of the ten virgins, in Matt. 25: 1–13, and read it in harmony with his interpretation, that Christ's second coming took place at the destruction of Jerusalem, when Titus took the city:

"Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom. And five of them were wise, and five were foolish. They that were foolish took their lamps, and took no oil with them: but the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps. While" Titus "tarried, they all slumbered and slept. And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold" Titus "cometh; go ye out to meet him. Then all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps. And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil; for our lamps are gone out. But the wise answered, saying, Not so; lest there be not enough for us and you: but go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves. And while they went to buy," Titus "came; and they that were ready, went in with him to the marriage: and the door was shut. Afterward came also the other virgins, saying," Titus, Titus, "open to us. But he answered and said, Verily, I say unto you, I know you not. Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour when" Titus "cometh."

We left the friends of truth rejoicing greatly over the results of the discussion. We stopped with Bro. Sheldon, with whom we had a very pleasant visit. His health is improving slowly.

AFFAIRS IN EUROPE.

During the past week, no material change has taken place in the situation of affairs in Europe. There have been new efforts to secure a peace between the powers at war, but thus far they have failed. England is anxious to have the war closed, but no satisfactory terms have yet been proposed to meet the wishes of both parties. France is evidently growing weaker in the hands of Prussia. There is but little probability that the French republic will be established as the permanent government of France. Prussia will be opposed to it; also England and Russia, besides the rich men of the French nation. During the eighteen years reign of Napoleon, France had great prosperity, and many are anxiously desiring his return to the throne.

It is said there is a very sad state of things in Paris, with but little hope of any improvement under the present government.

WHAT OTHERS SAY.

The following is from the New York "special correspondent" to the Chicago Tribune. Although a cold, worldly-minded, fashionable ministry, and a luke-warm church will not call the attention of the people to the signs of the times, yet they are so marked, that even secular editors and their correspondents, who make no profession of religion, are satisfied that the signs of the times are ominous of great events near at hand. If they would, they find it hard to shake off the impression that the end of the present dispensation is not far in the distance. The correspondent says:

"We've had an earthquake. No great shakes, to be sure, but just enough to remind us that such things, having been, may yet be. To those at all familiar with the prophecies contained in the Old, as well as the New Testament Scriptures, and their startling and rapid fulfilment in our day, the part filled by the press in the strange and exciting drama of the nineteenth century, in which all climes and nations are cast, is one of intense interest. Little recked the devil when, for the modest consideration of an immortal soul, he imparted to Dr. Faustus that art above all other arts, that through its mighty agency should one day be blazoned to the world the signs of his own downfall and captivity for a thousand years, when he shall go no more forth to deceive the nations of the earth. We need prophets, and I had almost said pulpits, no longer, for the daily papers bear upon their faces (unconscious, it may be unwilling,) testimony to the truth of what has been foretold of our day. Wars and rumors of wars; earthquakes and pestilences; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear; wicked men and seducers waxing worse and worse; man's hand red with the blood of his fellow-man; and the events crowding so thick and fast that steam and electricity, pressed to their highest possibilities, are scarcely sufficient for your needs. A truckling pulpit, venal press, soiled ermine, and general wickedness in high places, we are told, are to be the distinguishing features of the latter days; and who honestly believes that corruption can go further, and even the semblance of order and government be preserved?"

THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

The official provincial correspondent from Berlin, says:—

"The present Government at Paris exists only by leave of the gutter democracy. It may negotiate where it likes, but Germany believes that peace is to be settled, as the war is, between Prussia and France."

It becomes more and more evident that the French Republic will be of short duration. The probabilities in favor of Napoleon's return to the throne of France are daily increasing. It is quite evident that Gen. Bazaine is acting in harmony with the wishes of Napoleon. King William is unwilling to acknowledge the republic. The present war aspect is quite another affair from what it was before Napoleon surrendered, and is carried on against the proper government of France, which was vested in its Emperor. Had King William surrendered to the French, then the Germans should have ceased their hostile movements. Napoleon is not responsible for the continuance of the war since his surrender. We may expect that the "red republican" party of Paris (for Paris rules France), which has been opposed to the Emperor, will be completely crushed by the Prussians, and then Napoleon may be again seated on the throne of France with increased security, to finish the closing drama in the history of the Roman empire.

PERSONAL.—To "S. S. C."—All must be borne patiently, or else the peace of God will depart. The cross must precede the crown. If we suffer with Christ, we shall reign with him. The night of weeping will soon be past. Endure it if you can. Ask the Lord to direct in all things. Trust every thing in his hands, and all will be well.

EXPLANATION ONCE MORE.

As many do not yet understand the date on their papers, or wrappers, we would say, the date on the paper is the time to which you have paid. If it is 7 Sept. 70, it means that you have paid to last Sept. If Nov. or Dec. 70, it shows that you have paid so much in advance; but if it is 67, 68 or 69, it shows that you are in arrears from that date, and ought to pay up immediately.

REDEMPTION.

Redemption has its commencement in this life, and is consummated when Jesus comes; and unless the work is commenced here, it can never be completed hereafter. It begins by freeing man from sin. "Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness." And it is impossible to secure a freedom from sin except by pardon; and it is impossible to obtain pardon without repentance; and it is equally impossible to repent till made sensible of one's sinful state. This leads us back to the true starting point. Men must firstly be led to feel themselves sinners, then they will repent, and at that point God will pardon; for "if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." This is the commencement of redemption,—a redemption from sin, from condemnation, and from the gall of bitterness, to the enjoyment of the peace of God, and the sweet smiles of the Savior—it being a change from sin to holiness, from darkness to light, from condemnation to Divine approbation.

But notwithstanding this change, and the rich enjoyment arising from it, we are as liable to die as other men, and are subject to disease and pain. Our physical organizations are still the same. But there is another stage in redemption which will change the physical man; and Infinite wisdom saw the necessity of two stages in the work of redemption—a preparatory stage, and a finishing stage; the preparatory stage being to cleanse man from all sin, and the final stage being to immortalize him in his pure state; for after being made recipients of the Holy Spirit, Paul says, "Ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body."—Rom. 8: 23.

Here is a phase of "redemption" that has to do with the "body." And this redemption is interwoven with the coming of Christ; for in giving signs of his future coming, Jesus says, "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh."—Luke 21: 28. But what kind of redemption is due then? Paul tells us. "Our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body."—Phil. 3: 20. 21. This "redemption of the body" is redemption completed. Firstly, redemption from sin, and, secondly, redemption from mortality. W. S.

"DEAD MEN SHALL LIVE."

Those theologians who repudiate the resurrection of the material body, and insist that it is a "spiritual body" that is to be raised, which they make equivalent to an immortal personality within man, are confronted by the statement, "Dead men shall live; together with my dead body shall they arise."—Isa. 26: 19. Thus the resurrection, instead of bringing up deathless men, is to release "dead men" from death; and instead of unhousing a deathless body, is to cause a "dead body" to come forth.

If the theory of the existence of a "spiritual body" within the natural body were true, thus making a double man, why does the prophet, if he is really teaching the resurrection of the spiritual body, use this language: "Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust; . . . and the earth shall cast out the dead"? Does this spirit-man need to be awakened? And does it go into the "dust"? Does it become "dead"? Is it to be "cast out" of the earth?

But it is not true that the "spiritual body" has a co-existence with the natural body, but the natural body has its existence first, and then "it is sown a natural body"; but after reposing in the embrace of death for a while, "it is raised a spiritual body." So the body of the saint is not recognized as a spiritual body till it is "raised." Christ once had a natural body like ours, but by virtue of a change at the resurrection, he now possesses a spiritual body. "That was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual."—1 Cor. 15: 44. We shall wear the "image of the heavenly" Adam after "mortality is swallowed up of life."

Yes, God's "dead men shall live"; they shall awake "to everlasting life" at the call of Jehovah; "neither can they [then] die any more;" for "there shall be no more death" from that time onward. As a pledge, we are pointed to the resurrection of Christ, which did not consist in a release of the soul from the body, but actually liberated the body from death. This is presented to faith's eye as a sample. Can we doubt? W. S.

THE INTELLECTUAL SPIRIT IN MAN.—To prove that man is in possession of a personal spirit, or an entity possessing intellect, we are often referred to 1 Cor. 2: 11,—"For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? Even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God." If this text proves the spirit of man an entity within man, it as strongly proves the Spirit of God an entity within God, and that proves too much, and hence shows a defect in the premise of the argument, which consists in the arbitrary assumption that the term spirit here signifies a personality: but since this definition will not bear in this text without also proving a personality within God, let us try another definition of spirit—mind. "Save the mind of man which is in within him. Even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the mind of God."

This mental spirit is not a personality, however, either in man or God. The human mind is so connected with the physical system as to keep pace with its various changes from the feebleness of infancy to the summit of mortal vigor, and from thence declining with the body till it reaches its second childhood It is likewise often affected by disease. It is true that some diseases weaken the body, and leave the mind strong; and it is equally a true that some diseases weaken the mind, and leave the body strong; but this depends upon the nature of the disease. If mind were immortal, it could not be affected by disease under any circumstances. W. S.

ENCOURAGE YOUNG PREACHERS.—Many young men who feel called of God to preach the gospel get disheartened, and do but little or nothing, for want of timely and proper encouragement; and this has been the case to some extent among us as a people. We want the best talent; and that is all right; but let us not forget that these very men who have the best talent were once young and inexperienced. We must not wait till young men show themselves giants before we help them.

By helping them, I do not mean early ordination, for I doubt the propriety of this in ordinary cases; nor do I mean that we should in all cases, at once constitute them pastors. I do not mean that we should flatter them with the thought that they are talented ministers, for that will spoil their spirituality, and thus, unfit them for the work of the Lord But help get them into the field. Give out appointments for them in school-houses and new places, always encouraging them to preach on experimental and practical themes in the early part of their ministry; then follow up with social meetings. It is a mistake that young ministers too often make in trying to plunge into theology the first thing they do. There is something else to preach.

Also, let ministers, as well as laymen, encourage the young to do duty in this direction by taking them out to help them in meetings. W. S.

PRAYER.—That prayer ought to be a pleasurable ingredient in christian devotion, none can deny. But it is so abused that in too many instances it becomes distasteful and repulsive; and as a result a feeling of aversion takes the place of a feeling of respect for prayer. The preacher is tediously long, keeping the people waiting to hear him teach God a lesson, telling him how old he is, how powerful he is; and, as though his memory had failed him, they enumerate a long list of his mighty acts in the past, and tell him all about his former dealings with men; and then seeming satisfied that they have given him some valuable information for which he is greatly indebted to them, they put in a faint plea for a blessing; but often, not feeling half the earnestness in this part of the prayer that was evinced in teaching God his lesson, they fail to get the blessing; and the people feel like saying, concerning this pretty talk to God, "Did n't God know all that before?" And around the family altar, long prayers beget in the minds of children a disrelish for devotion, and they will seek an opportunity to dodge the tedious ceremony as often as possible.

Prayers should never be lectures to God. but simply petitions, coming from believing hearts, and should always be short, except in secret—there long prayers are not objectionable. W. S.

SALVATION OF ALL MEN.—Much is said in repudiation of the doctrine of the salvation of all men, but this is simply making war on a man of straw, for nobody can be found who believes that all men are to be saved. There is a class, however, who believe that all ghosts will be saved, and that all men will eternally sleep in death; but they have fallen into the unscriptural practice of calling ghosts men, and have assumed, without proof, that the ghost of man is a personality: so they claim to believe in the salvation of all men, when they simply mean ghost-men—a race of beings existing only in imagination, not entitled to salvation, nor exposed to damnation; for although we read about the "giving up of the ghost" at the death of man, we find no proof of its personality. And even if it were a personality, instead of an element, it is not the accountable part of man, for the Revelator affirms, "The sea gave up the dead which were in it, and death and hades delivered up the dead which were in them, and they were judged, every man."

Thus the very "man" that is "dead," whether in "sea" or land, must be judged; hence, the very man that dies is the accountable being; and as God does not act on the dishonest principle that some men do, in charging the same thing to two persons, God will settle the account with the physical man, judge him worthy of salvation, or deserving of damnation. There is nothing in the Bible about judging, saving, or damning ghosts, or spirit-men. W. S.

HOPE.—"If we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it." Hope looks forward, and aspires after something yet future; so the "hope of eternal life" negates the theory of eternal life already possessed by the soul, for we cannot hope for that which we already possess. If the soul is already immortal, it must live eternally, and to live eternally would be eternal life; so on the immortal-soul hypothesis, the "hope of eternal life" is superfluous.

We hope only for that which we "wait" for, not for that which we already possess. Nor can the force of this conclusion be evaded by the claim that eternal life means future happiness, for that is an assumption without proof. It is true that the same class who are hereafter to gain eternal life, will also be possessed of happiness; but what would future happiness be worth without eternal life to make it endless? No matter how perfect the happiness might be, its value would depend upon its duration, and eternal life would give it eternal duration; and without it, happiness must sometimes terminate. Besides, happiness is not possible without life, so God makes prominent the offer of eternal life, as the basis of eternal happiness. W. S.

"BEGINNING FROM THE LAST UNTO THE FIRST."—Jesus illustrates the labor of his servants in the vineyard of the Lord, and the time of reward for their labor, by the conduct of a householder who hired laborers into his vineyard, at different hours of the day, from "morning" till "even"; and concludes the illustration by saying: "So when even was come, the Lord of the vineyard saith unto his steward, Call the laborers, and give them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first." Some had entered the vineyard at the first hour, some at the third, the sixth, the ninth, and the eleventh hours of the day, and when the day had ended, and not before, payment was due, "beginning from the last unto the first."

So during the gospel day, laborers have been called into the Master's vineyard at different hours, from the first to the eleventh hours; but not till the day closes will any of the laborers receive their wages; and so far from having those rewarded first who entered the vineyard first, the specified order is, "beginning from the last unto the first"; then every laborer will receive the penny of eternal life; but the first laborer that entered the vineyard cannot receive it before the last. We are already in the eleventh hour of the gospel day. Soon the day will close, and the time of settlement come. W. S.

TRACTS TO SCATTER IN WIS.

Wishing to scatter my four new tracts more extensively in Wisconsin than I have been able to do with my own hand, with the help of a few friends, I offer to send by mail to any brother or sister living in Wisconsin, as many as 10 cents will prepay, if they will send me the postage, provided they send any time before the close of November, giving plain directions where to send them. I limit the offer to Wisconsin for the present, and restrict as to the quantity allowed each individual, fearing they may be too soon exhausted. Let no one send over 10 cts. in postage unless they design it as a donation to aid the enterprise. Direct to William Sheldon, Brodhead, Green Co., Wis., and send within the time specified. W. S.

THE SABBATH.

Whether the keeping of the Sabbath is enjoined upon us in this dispensation or not, I can not say; but does it not seem to be a stumbling-block in the way of others, if not kept by all who claim to be followers of Christ?

It is considered by the church generally, and by all of the world, to be a command binding upon all to keep the Sabbath holy; and the breaking of it is looked upon as sinful. Now we are told to "abstain from all appearance of evil" (1 Thess. 5: 22), and it seems to me that while the keeping of it is so regarded, it is an appearance of evil to neglect the observance of the day.

I am led to this suggestion, because I have often heard it spoken reproachfully of the Adventists, that they do not keep the Sabbath; and it has seemed, in most cases, to prejudice the mind against the doctrines we all love so well. I never knew anything but a blessing to attend the observance of the day. Would it not be better to keep the day, considering the feeling prevalent regarding it, than to have the cause of Christ suffer in consequence of our neglect to do that which is considered a vital part of the christian life? NEW YORK CONFERENCE.

The Lord willing, the next quarterly meeting of N. Y. Adv. Chris. Conf. will be held with the church in Honeoye, commencing Thursday evening, Dec. 1st, and continuing over the Lord's day.

It is very desirable that all the churches take into immediate consideration the matter of appointing delegates to represent them, and report the progress of the great work they have in charge in their several localities. Also to remember the quarterly contribution (taken after one week's notice), to meet the demands of the cause in the State at large.

Dear Brn., do not forget this part of our conference duties. Send in your mites in the name of the Lord, by letter or delegate. The matter of dividing the State is to come up (see last report). All sections are interested, let all be represented. Teams will be in waiting at Livonia Station, Erie railway, to meet the eleven A. M. and five P. M. trains from Rochester. Accommodation will be provided for all that come with public or private conveyance. Come praying.

FIRE-BRICK MEN.—There are fire-brick men in the Christian church. They come of royal, humble blood. They are found in obscure families. They are searched out by Providences tried in the furnaces of affliction, and fused into condensed power by peculiar agencies, for setting in prominent places in the great spiritual temple. Like the three Hebrew children, they stand the fire. Men who have passed through intense sorrow and suffering are the truest for health and for altar tests. Men who have been disciplined by loss, by ridicule, by persecution, are the men to set in exposed places where ordinary human nature would yield and give way.—Workday Christianity.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 24th, 1870, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

For the World's Crisis.

LOWELL, MASS.

The church at this place has been signally blessed under the labors of Bro. Mitchell of Maine. Among those seeking after the truth is Mr. R. G. Wells, formerly a spiritualist medium, of considerable repute in the western part of New York State, and specially Rochester, N. Y. He had been guided and directed so long by lying spirits, and was so completely under their control, that his nearest and dearest friends thought that he would surely go down to death denying the Lord that bought him, thereby bringing upon himself swift destruction.

But the Lord has heard the prayers of his people. Mr. Wells' eldest son, an Adventist preacher, living in Rochester, has made his father a subject of prayer during the past two years, and while he almost doubted, the Lord heard and answered.

Several years ago, the subject of this notice was a licensed preacher in the Wesleyan Methodist church, and of course believed in the inherent immortality of man, and reasoned thus: "If there is an immortal principle in man that leaves the body at death, and goes to a place of happiness, is it unreasonable to suppose that this same principle can communicate with the loved ones of earth, as angels did of old?"

Such thoughts induced him to investigate spiritualism, and investigation brought the conviction that if the theory of the "immortality of the soul" is true, then spiritualism must be the true religion. He now plainly sees that man is really a mortal being, but will put on immortality at the appearing of Jesus. "For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."

O may he ever be faithful, so that when the glad morning of the resurrection dawns, he may meet wife and children who are now sleeping the sleep that knows no awakening, till the opening heavens shall reveal the matchless form of the "very same Jesus," clothed in robes of royalty, coming to set the captives free, and to give them eternal life and a home in the glorified earth. THE ATTITUDE OF RUSSIA.

Our despatches from Europe again mention the great diplomatic and military activity of the Russian government. Early last spring, ere there was a sign of trouble directly between France and Prussia, we repeatedly called attention to the manœuvres of armies going on throughout the latter kingdom, and that, too, while the remainder of the press, British and American, seemed to ignore them. We now remark the very peculiar attitude of Russia, and find in it growing symptoms of a far wider catastrophe than has already taken Europe by surprise.

The well known Russian organ Le Nord has distinctly intimated that the equilibrium of the Continent, endangered by the culpable ambition of one Power and by the blind obstinacy of another, must be secured by the intervention of a State sufficiently strong to make itself respected by both parties, and yet not liable to be suspected of sympathy for the passions or the projects of one or the other. This is plain and pointed talk, and, to back it, we hear of the Czar concentrating nearly five hundred thousand of his best drilled troops toward his western frontiers and summoning his terrible Cossack riders to the field. Common sense tells us that this muster is not made for the protection of his Prussian neighbor, since the utmost that France could hope to do, for the present, would be to raise the siege of Paris. It is not to shield Russia itself from Prussian invasion, since the Northern winter, which no foreign foe would dare to brave, is at the door, and, moreover, Prussia has not completed the heavy task that she is unwisely enlarging in France. The political wisdom of Prussia, disguise it as she may attempt to do, has been alarmed, and a rumor came weeks ago from Berlin that in order to secure the Czar's consent to the dismemberment of France she was willing to give that potentate the two duchies of Mecklenburg, and to compensate the ruler of these minor principalities by forming the conquered provinces of Alsace and Lorraine into one grand duchy under his immediate control, as governor or viceroy. But there is another solution to all this imbroglio, and it is comparatively close at hand. The secret of that solution will be found in the memorable words of the Great Napoleon, which we do freely into English from the exact text of his Memorial, written at St. Helena:—

"Ere fifty years shall have passed," said the imperial political soothsayer, "France will be republican or Cossack. Then, if my son be alive, he will be called to the throne amid the acclamations of the people. If he be no more France will again become republican, since no other hand would dare to grasp the sceptre that he could not uphold."

"The Orleans branch, although acceptable, is too feeble; it partakes too much of the other Bourbons and it will meet with the same fate, should its members not prefer to live the life of simple citizens, no matter what changes may intervene. Once again France will be republican, and the other countries will follow her example. Germans, Prussians, Poles, Italians, Danes, Swedes and Russians will unite with her in a crusade in favor of liberty. They will take up arms against their sovereigns, who will hasten to make concessions to them so as to retain a part of their old authority; they will call themselves constitutional kings with limited powers. Thus will the feudal system receive its death blow; like fog in the midst of the ocean it will vanish at the first rays of the sun of liberty.

"But things will not remain there; the wheel of revolution will not stop at that point; its impetuosity will multiply fivefold, and its rapidity will increase in like proportion. When a people has regained a part of its rights it becomes enthusiastically inspired by victory, and, having tasted the sweets of liberty, it grows the more enterprising in order to obtain the more. The States of Europe will for some years, perhaps, be in a state of continual agitation, like the soil at the moment which precedes an earthquake; but at last the lava will burst forth and the explosion will terminate everything.

"The bankruptcy of England will be the lava which is to shake the world and swallow up the kings and the aristocracies, will cement the interest of the democracy by its eruption. Believe me, Las Casas, in like manner as the vines that cover the foot of Etna and of Vesuvius produce the most delicious vintages, so will the tree of liberty become fixed and not to be cast down when it shall have its roots planted in that revolutionary lava which will have overflowed all the monarchies. May it bloom and flourish for ages! These may seem strange sentiments for you to hear from my lips; however, they are really mine. I was born a republican; but destiny and the opposition of Europe have made me an Emperor. I now wait the future."

Such was the impressive language, in many places attaining the grandeur of prophecy, in which Napoleon, from the calm heights of contemplation, after having held the fate of Europe in the hollow of his hand, announced the inevitable changes visible to him from the summit of his political Pisgah. The fifty years have rolled away; a nephew (not a son) of the Emperor sat for eighteen years upon the throne of France, and has fallen from it. France is again republican; the nations of Europe are preparing to follow her example; the lava of revolution begins to grow hot beneath the feet of Prussia and to throw its warmth into the palace of the Russian Czar. The Cossacks are summoned to extinguish it. Hence the armaments, hence the diplomatic agitation, hence the hurrying to and fro, on every road and iron rail from the Black Sea to the Neva, and from the Neva toward the Danube. The hour is coming; the supreme conflict is no longer distant. Republican or Cossack?—which shall win?—N. Y. Herald.

Correspondence.

From Bro. T. J. Carle.

DEAR BRN.:—How sweet, how blessed, to know that we serve a prayer-hearing and a prayer-answering God, who is not tired of hearing his children pray. It is blessed to pour out our souls in prayer to Jesus when we know that he hears us plead. No matter how weak, how small, or how broken our prayers, he knows how to put them together to get our true meaning; then comes down the blessing so sweet that we feel we never will cease to pray; but when temptations beset us on every hand, and we feel it is no use to try to serve God any longer, we remember the words of the poet—

"Have we trials and temptations?
Is there trouble any where?
We should never be discouraged,
Take it to the Lord in prayer."

We come to Him asking him to help us, and almost before we are done asking the temptation has fled, and we feel new courage and thank his blessed name for the privilege of prayer. It is blessed to tell Jesus all our troubles away in the woods, or in the barn, or in our secret place of prayer, wherever it may be, when we know that he listens to our prayers and will in his own good time send us sweet answers of peace. Sometimes we think he does not hear us, but when we least expect it, then comes the answer to our petition and even more than we asked for.

Prayer brings us near to our blessed Savior. When we bow before him, we feel that there is only a thin veil between us, and we feel so near to him that we ask for what we need and we get it. Then we thank him for his goodness, and feel that he is our Father and we are his children, and we will serve him faithfully as long as we live. And if Jesus comes before we die we can say, This is my blessed Savior, who heard my feeble prayers; he has come to save us, and we will praise him for ever and ever.

Hollis, Me. T. J. CARLE.

Extracts from Letters.

SR. JULIA A. RHOADES writes from Detroit, Mich.:—"I have enlisted in the army of the Lord. I have been teaching and preaching the blessed truths of the Bible for thirteen years. I have been a member of the M. E. church. My husband was a minister. I was a firm believer in everlasting torment. I had been taught that only a part of the Bible was for us to understand; and that we had no right to investigate it. There was always a mystery to me why God should make a law, the penalty of which was eternal torment; such a horrid hell as some preach.

Though all my friends have forsaken me, because of my faith, I never was so happy before as I am now. I am looking for Jesus to come. Glory be to his name. I love his appearing. What a glorious and sublime event! Man will no longer be filled with all unrighteousness; but the earth shall be full of the knowledge of God, as the waters cover the sea. May the time soon come."

BRO. G. A. STREETER writes:—"Last Sunday (Oct. 30th) I was at No. Adams. The work is still onward. One was baptized, one confessed his wanderings, and more are under heavy conviction. Praise the Lord. Never was there such a time to preach as at the present. I find that if I make the truth plain and pointed (in love) it will have its application. O for wisdom from on high to speak rightly.

Now is the time for protracted meetings. Brethren and sisters, wake up to this important theme."

SR. M. J. ELLSWORTH writes:—"Our Father in heaven is good. He giveth us all things. Let us offer thanksgivings. Thank him for earth's best blessings—its homes. The writer of these lines wishes to become acquainted with some brother or sister who wishes the assistance of a woman in any or all of the labors required in the household, and would endeavor to faithfully perform all the duties committed to her hands. Please address—Maria J. Ellsworth, East Washington, N. H."

BRO. E. MORRILL writes:—"At the close of our labors with the Tent, I returned home severely afflicted with a lung difficulty; but after two weeks' rest with my family, I recovered, and now am feeling strong, not only in body, but in the Lord. To him belongs the praise. I am now waiting for marching orders, ready to go into the field, in any direction where I can best honor God. Brethren and sisters, fight on a little longer, and a crown of life will be ours."

Obituaries.

CRANE. Died, of consumption, in Mannahawkin, Ocean Co., N. J., Sept. 24th, 1870, Zippie H., daughter of Capt. John G. and Alvina Crane, aged twenty-four years, eleven months, and twenty-four days.

She feared no evil, for she knew her life was "hid with Christ in God." Cut down as she was like a flower that falleth by the scythe, yet in her suffering she willingly submitted to the will of her Master, and now quietly sleeps in Jesus, and will awake and receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away, when her Lord and Master shall appear. Funeral services by Rev. H. Beegle, assisted by Rev. Mr. Brow. T. TILTON.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

LONDON, Nov. 1.—Father Benson, Superintendent of the Oxford Monastery, sails with 30 of his brethren to found a monastery in America. He will land in Boston.

Nov. 3. Advices from Tours state that the Red Republicans at Marseilles are again rampant and revolutionary. A proclamation has just been issued by the leaders announcing the establishment of a new Republic, embracing the cities and territory of sixteen departments to the southward.

Private despatches from Berlin, state that the armistice has been signed at Versailles.

A telegram from Versailles states that Count Bismarck, on behalf of Prussia offered to the provisional government of France, an armistice of twenty-five days duration, to allow the general elections to be held throughout France, for deputies to the Constituent Assembly. This tender was made to M. Thiers, as the envoy of France.

Nov. 3.—It is reported that Thiers has proposed at Versailles an armistice on the basis proposed by the British Ministry, and that the proposition will be if not already, accepted by Prussia. Thiers expresses great satisfaction with the course pursued by England.

The last English and American families which will be permitted to leave Paris take their departure this morning. At last advices, Washburne was preparing to come out.

The courage and address of the American Ambulance Corps is subject to especial praise.

It is asserted that food and material sufficient to have supplied Bazaine's army four months had been found in Metz.

Bazaine's plot to surrender Metz, on the basis of restoring the Empire, was known at Paris on the 25th. It caused great excitement. Crowds collected in front of the Hotel de Ville. The members of the government said it was an outrageous calamity. No soldier of France ever thought a Bonapartist could descend to such a depth of infamy.

BERLIN, Nov. 4.—The capture of Dijon is confirmed by official despatches just received from Gen. Werder. A large part of town was burned by the bombardment. The 1st Prussian Grenadiers had 200 men placed hors du combat in the engagement, and the 2d Grenadiers had 500. The French losses are unknown, but are believed to be heavy.

On Wednesday there were 21 generals and 87 superior officers with the Emperor Napoleon at Wilhelmshohe. Prince Murat remained there and the rest proceeded to Berlin.

LONDON, Nov. 4.—The National Guard and the Garde Mobile refuse to fight under Garibaldi, who is organizing the Francs Tireurs.

Frankfort bankers have offered to advance money to several French towns, which are unable to bear the burdens of war.

The Prussian Government has approved of this project.

Later advices from Paris give particulars of the disturbances which occurred there on Monday last. Formidable riots occurred. Members of the Government were detained as prisoners for several hours before they were released by the soldiers of National Guard.

Paris will vote on Thursday next if the powers of the government of defence are maintained. A mayor will be elected for each arrondissement. During the disturbances Trochu was threatened by the mob; muskets and bayonets were pointed at him, but his calmness disarmed the rioters. The Paris journals all contain articles urging the government to take energetic measures.

FLORENCE, Nov. 5. The Italian Ministry have united in a manifesto formally proposing the removal of the capital to Rome in July next.

BERLIN, Oct. 6. A telegram from Versailles announces that the Prussian scouts have pursued and captured two balloons from Paris, which had become unmanageable in adverse winds and had descended suddenly. These balloons contained despatches and letters, the former principally relating to the condition of affairs within the Capital. Everything is reported to be quiet, both inside the city and the forts outside of Paris.

A despatch from Versailles states that the armistice has been definitely rejected, that M. Adolphi Thiers has been recalled from his mission to Versailles, and that the negotiations for an armistice have been broken off.

The New York Herald has the following special:—

BERLIN, Nov. 6. News of the progress of negotiations between the French authorities and Chancellor for an armstice is the universal subject of discussion here. It is generally held that Thiers will have to make important concessions from his original proposition to secure that result.

During the last fortnight, six villages near Orleans, whose inhabitants made common cause with the Franc-tireurs have been burnt.

LONDON, Oct. 5. Fresh disturbances are reported in Paris, growing out of insurrectionary agitations of Monday and Tuesday last, fomented by Flourens and the Red leaders.

LONDON, Nov. 7. The Times this morning says the armistice turned on the question of free ingress at Paris during the twenty-five days—Thiers insisting and Bismarck refusing. During the conference between Thiers and Favre at Sevres, the Paris forts maintained a steady fire on the place of interview. The conference lasted over eight hours.

The Paris Liberte asserts that Bismarck proposes the restoration of the Pope's temporal power.

Twenty-two hundred guns are in position on the various fortifications of Paris. The morning papers of this city deplore the fatuity of Paris in declining the preliminary overtures to peace.

VERSAILLES, Nov. 7. A despatch states that most active and determined preparations are making for the immediate bombardment of Paris, and all hopes of an armstice on any terms are now at an end.

The people are clamorous for the continuance of the war, despite their sufferings.

Laureaw strongly favors an armstice, and hopes this desired consummation is not yet yielded.

The correspondent says there is good authority for stating that the bombardment of Paris commences to-morrow.

The Prussians are now resolved to push the war to its extreme without an instant's delay.

FROM CHINA.

LONDON, Nov. 7. Advices from Shanghae to Oct. 19th state that four gunboats, mounting ten guns each, had been launched, and are being fitted out for service. The Chinese government is importing enormous quantities of powder and arms, besides several batteries of cannon. Affairs are assuming a serious turn.

The French at last seem to have discovered a truly charming and murderous missile. The Satan Fusee, if the account given of it in LaFrance is correct, leaves nothing to be desired in the way of destruction. It is beautifully simple, and may be handled by a child. A plain unassuming hollow bomb-shell is filled with petroleum, the explosion of which is regulated by a time fuze. One of the fusees tried at St. Cloud covered an immense space of ground with "a sea of liquid and inextinguishable fire."

EUGENIE AT WILHELMSHOHE.—We have the news that the Empress Eugenie was last Sunday at Wilhelmshohe, on a visit to Napoleon; that Napoleon, Eugenie and Bazaine had had a confidential conference, and that a messenger, meantime conveniently near, was awaiting the result of this conference in order to communicate it to King William at Versailles. Now, if there is any truth in these reports, the surrender by Bazaine of his army of one hundred and fifty thousand men loses much of its mystery, and there is a pretty good foundation for the suspicions and conjectures that have been accumulating since the mysterious mission of Bourbaki from Metz to England in reference to a restoration of the Bonapartes. King William, with the consent of the neutral Powers, may perhaps find in this scheme a way to peace; but it will involve a remarkable change from the programme of the Holy Alliance of 1814 and 1815 for the dethronement of the Bonapartes, and a change quite as remarkable from the original purpose of this war on the part of Prussia. The crisis in France, however, is such that something must soon be done for peace; and in this light we know not what a day may bring forth.—Herald, Nov. 2.

☞ The Turkish Government, after several years of waiting, has at length granted permission for the building of the Bible House in Constantinople. This intelligence will spread joy among the Christians throughout the Ottoman Empire, and it has been received with deep satisfaction in this country, especially among those who contributed so liberally to this important object three years since. The money then raised amounted to a little more than $50,000 in currency. Since that time it has increased in value by the appreciation of our currency. It was also securely invested by Trustees in New York, gentlemen of the highest christian and commercial standing, and the present amount of the fund is $63,000. The work of building will now be entered upon at once, and on the beautiful site which has been secured in the old city of Stamboul itself, the very heart of the Turkish Empire.

War Items.

☞ The new King of Spain is a young man, a little over twenty-five years of age, and so far has seen but little of public life. In Italy he is very well liked. He has been brought up in the school of constitutional monarchy, and ought to make an honest and liberal ruler.

☞ A despatch from Rome states that the Pope has despatched a note to the Nuncios at the foreign courts, hinting that he will be forced to take his departure from Rome soon.

☞ All the French Marshals and Generals have been ordered by King William, at the request of Napoleon, to report at Cassel without delay.

☞ La Francais says that the popular feeling toward Napoleon's dynasty is not mere coldness, but hatred and contempt. The Women's Club at Marseilles propose to erect a guillotine and behead the Bishop of that city as a beginning of the work.

☞ Van Beust is busy in attempting to bring together an European Congress, which will guaranty the safety, independence and support of the Pope.

☞ A correspondent in London closes a long letter with the statement that in case the war in France is pushed to the bitter end, there is strong probability Great Britain will be found arrayed in arms on the side of France.

☞ All the advices from Paris conclude with the statement that the utmost determination prevailed, and that the defence would certainly be obstinate and prolonged.

☞ Garibaldi's headquarters are at Affanges. In encounters with the enemy, near Besancon, he captured over 1000 prisoners.

☞ Refugees from Paris say that the Parisians are really greatly discouraged at the state of anarchy into which the war has thrown the country, and they long for any event that will bring the evil to an end.

☞ The Electeur Libre prints a speech made by Favre on the 14th, saying that the Orleans Princes have an army of 150,000 men in the West.

DOMESTIC.

OLD JOHN STREET.—The 104th anniversary of the oldest Methodist church in America was celebrated last Sunday. This is an annual reunion, and is a meeting of great interest. The church is thronged and Bishops and eminent men attend. The congregation is made up usually entirely of strangers. It costs about $5000 a year to maintain service, and this is contributed by the church at large. The church belongs to the National Conference.

"SOJOURNER TRUTH" ON THE FASHIONS.—"Sojourner" does not believe in the present style of women's apparel. Her opinion of it was given in an address at Providence last week, as follows:

"'I'm awful hard on dress, you know.' Women, you forget that you are the mothers of creation; you forget your sons were cut off like grass by the war, and the land was covered with their blood; you rig yourselves up in panniers and Grecian bendbacks and flummeries; yes, and mothers and gray haired grandmothers wear high heeled shoes and humps on their heads, and put them on their babies, and stuff them out so that they keel over when the wind blows. Oh mothers, I'm ashamed of ye! What will such lives as you live do for humanity? When I saw them women on the stage at the Women's Suffrage Convention, the other day, I thought, what kind of reformers be you, with goose wings on your heads, as if you were going to fly, and dressed in such ridiculous fashion, talking about reform and women's rights? 'Pears to me you had better reform yourselves first. But Sojourner is an old body, and will soon go out of this world into another, and wants to say when she gets there, 'Lord, I have done my duty, I have told the whole truth and kept nothing back.'"

REPLANTING TEETH.—A new feature in dentistry is recorded in the Transactions of Odontological Society of London. It consists in the replantation of teeth which have been extracted. In other words, it has been found that in cases of inflammation about the roots of a tooth, the latter may be taken out, scraped and cleaned, reinserted, made to do duty again. The method of procedure is to remove the diseased tooth; clean out its cavities, filling them up, after cleaning with carbolic acid, with cotton wool impregnated with the same; next, to scrape the fangs, but preserving the mucous membrane about the neck; and after bathing in a solution of carbolic acid, return to its place. The London Lancet says, in speaking of the process: "Mr. Lyons carried this out in fourteen cases for Mr. Boleman, with success, in the case of bicuspids and molars, no mechanical appliances being used to keep the teeth supported until they had become firm."

☞ A recent visitor to the Shenandoah Valley, which was so burned and blasted during the war, says that all traces of the devastation have passed away, and it is now again one prolonged garden spot, verdure clad, fenced and dotted with farm houses and barns.

Religious Items.

☞ The Roman Catholic Church is making great progress among the negroes of the South. It is estimated that since the rebellion several hundred thousand negroes have joined. Somehow or other an idea prevailed at the South during the rebellion that the Catholic Church was more or less friendly to that cause. For this reason this denomination has received large accessions from some of the most prominent families of the South. A gentleman who has lately traveled through the South states that large and liberal arrangements are being made by the church to profit by the feeling which exists alike among the white and the negroes to extend its domain in that section.

☞ The Free Church of Scotland Monthly Record says that in Scotland there is a growing tendency among the young people to leave the Presbyterian for the Episcopal Church. This it accounts for mainly because of the more fashionable position of the later. It adds that it "would be comparatively easy to reconcile ourselves" to their going over to the Low Church; but that "when Presbyterians go over the border under a pressure of a love for music and form and a symbolical worship" they are not content with anything less than an extravagant ritual that is half way to Rome.

☞ The City Mission Society of New York, through its clergy and visitors, reached 56,000 individuals during the past year,—all, with few exceptions, belonging to the lowest and most dangerous metropolitan class.

☞ Mother Xavier, of the Sisters of Mercy, Manchester, N. H., has taken in charge the three children of Dr. Stone—a recent convert from the Episcopalian to the Catholic Church.

☞ A Maine letter writer says that a minister died in that State a few years since, who was a Christian 77 years, and a minister of the gospel 75 years. The same correspondent heard the Rev. Mr. Sawyer speak at Bangor an hour and a quarter, without notes, when he was just one hundred years old.

☞ The Free Methodists, by resolution, denounce waterfalls, gaiters, jewelry, and all female ornaments, from head to foot.

☞ The Jewish Times asserts that there is no specific Jewish oath. It declares that according to the Jewish law a simple affirmation is equivalent to an oath.

CHANGE.

My spirit yearns for nobler scenes,
Where sin's dark cloud ne'er intervenes,
To mar my peace with God;
Where endless joy shall fill my heart,
Bid doubts be gone and fears depart—
Where souls and lives accord.

Earth, too, is groaning for a change,
Her bowels heave with inward pain,
As muttering earthquakes tell;
A burning fever in her veins,
Will soon destroy what health remains—
Convulsions speak her knell.

Then God shall speak, and not in vain,
"Old earth, uncover now thy slain—
Both saint and sinner rise!"
Old earth obeys! the wicked dead
Arise to hear their doom; the saints
Come forth in glad surprise.

The living changed—the dead arise,
Caught up together in the skies—
What sudden bliss is this!
Lord, make me meet for such a change;
O, make me worthy through thy name
To share such endless bliss.

"HE SHALL BE SAVED": WHICH? MAN, OR HIS GHOST?

Is man to be saved as a physical personality, or is it an immaterial entity within man that is to be saved? If there is a deathless soul-man within the dying body-man, which is to be saved? And if not saved at all, which is to be punished? Is it the soul-man? That depends upon what man is to be saved from. We read, "He shall save his people from their sins." So if the soul-man is the sinner, the body-man is not exposed to punishment, not being the guilty party; nor is it entitled to a share in the great salvation from sin, never having been a sinner. Mohammed was keen enough to see this difficulty in his system of theology, and sought to furnish a solution to the question, "Which shall be punished for sin—the soul or the body?" by trying to make both guilty, by thus illustrating the matter: A blind man and a lame man wished to steal apples: the lame man could not walk to the orchard; the blind man could not see the apples after walking there: so they entered into a covenant, the blind man agreeing to carry the lame man to the orchard, and the lame man agreeing to steal the apples. After the crime was committed, they were both arrested. The lame man plead "not guilty" because he could not walk. The blind man plead "not guilty" because he could not see. Yet both were deemed guilty, and deserving of punishment. So the soul helps the body, and the body helps the soul commit sin, and both must be punished.

But a moment's reflection will show any one the unfairness of Mohammed's illustration. (1) Both the lame man and the blind man were possessed of intellect. (2) Both agreed to the crime, and helped do the deed, both knowing that it was wrong; which is entirely unlike having only one possessing a knowledge of right and wrong, while the other is but an unconscious tool, having no will in the matter; for it is claimed that the body is not the intellectual man, but merely an instrument doing the bidding of the soul, having no will nor mind distinct from the soul. Then to punish the body for the deeds which the soul used it to do, would be as unreasonable as to punish an axe with which a murderer had killed a man, seeing the axe had no will in the matter.

If only one is guilty, only one can be exonerated from guilt, and is the one to be saved. Reasoning from the hypothesis of a dual nature in man, the evidence so far seems to be in favor of saving the soul, leaving the body unsaved, for "he shall save his people from their sins"; and with the popular view the soul, and not the body, is the sinner, and it is the sinner that God proposes to save, by freeing him from sin. But let us read again: "Shall save a soul from death."

The kind of soul to be saved is exposed to "death," and an immortal soul cannot be in danger of death; nor will it avail anything to insist that it is a spiritual death, for (1) spiritual death is never connected with punishment, but with the crime; (2) if the death is not literal, neither can the salvation from it be literal. But all is plain when we learn that man as a soul, but not as a disembodied soul, is to be saved. God "formed man of the dust of the ground," and "man became a living soul." Such material souls sin, and get saved from sin; and such material souls are exposed to a penalty-death for sin, and can be saved from death.

The great mission of Jesus was not to save imperishable entities dwelling in man, but to save a race of perishing beings—man himself "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved." Thus Christ's mission was to "save" a class that were doomed to "perish"; and it cannot be said that imperishable souls would have perished without the Savior's aid; and if he came to literally save them, then they were liable to literally "perish." All this is true of man, but could not be true of a deathless entity in man.

Again. Man is exposed to a death that may be warded off by accepting Christ as the bread of life. "Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead. This is the bread that cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof and not die."—John 6: 49, 50. The part that the remedial plan proposes to benefit is liable to die without the proposed remedy, but this remedy will constitute it deathless. Allusion cannot be made to an immortal soul, as that is deathless independent of Christ; besides it is said that the fathers "are dead," and we shall "not die"; the same species of personages that "are dead" in one case, shall "not die" in the other case. Men, and not ghosts, are alluded to in both instances.

Men are to be saved or lost; not disembodied men, but men with bodies; hence, we read concerning the "redemption of our body." We nowhere read in the Bible about the salvation of disembodied souls at death, or at any other time; nor of the salvation of disembodied spirits. This is an ingredient of modern theology, unsupported by the testimony of the Bible.

Those who advocate the doctrine of the salvation of the spirit of man, independent of the body, frequently quote 1 Cor. 5: 5—"To deliver such an one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." Let us briefly examine the text, and learn its true sentiment.

1. The advocates of the salvation of a spirit entity in man, at death, separate from the body, cannot aid their cause by quoting this text; for, instead of supporting their theology, it proves too much for them, if it proves anything concerning the destiny of a disembodied spirit; for the spirit here spoken of, instead of being saved at death, is not to be saved till "the day of the Lord Jesus;" and when that day arrives, spirit and body will be united as really as now, as they themselves also believe, even if the spirit had existed between death and the resurrection in a conscious state. So this text does not prove the salvation of the spirit out of the body.

2. "The destruction of the flesh" here referred to, indicates a reformatory chastisement of some kind, to ultimately lead to the salvation of the person,—not the damnation of the body, and the salvation of the spirit without the body; and in order to this chastisement, this person, like Job, was to be delivered over to Satan for the infliction of some physical disease. "Destruction," from the Greek term olethron, is a correct rendering, but does not indicate the modus operandi, whether by pining sickness, leprosy, Job's boils, or some other scourge. The apostles certainly possessed power to deliver men over to a state of chastisement for their sins, that they might be made sensible of their folly, and be induced to reform, as in the case of Hymeneus and Alexander, whom Paul "delivered unto Satan, that they might learn not to blaspheme" (1 Tim. 1: 20), as in the case of Elymas, whom Paul made 'blind' for a year (Acts 13: 8, 12); and they also had power to inflict death, as in case of Ananias. But in this instance, Paul being unable to be present in person, and only present in spirit, delegates this apostolic power to the Corinthian church, and bids them, in his stead, to deliver this person over for "the destruction of the flesh," that he might thereby be brought to repentance, and finally be "saved."

3. "That the spirit may be saved." The term "spirit" is doubtless here used as a synonym of person in which sense it is sometimes used, as in 1 John 4: 1,—"Believe not every spirit, . . . because many false prophets are gone out into the world." Here the term refers to persons. And this use of the term is applicable to the resurrected saints, who are to be raised with spiritual bodies; for, in speaking of Christ in his resurrected state, it is expressly affirmed that he was "made a quickening spirit" (1 Cor. 15: 45), though, unlike an angelic spirit, he had "flesh and bones" (Luke 24: 39); and it is also declared that we shall "bear the image of the heavenly;" so we are to be "saved in the day of the Lord Jesus" as personal spirits, with spiritual bodies, but not as bodiless spirits. The salvation here promised is not to be realized independent of the body, for (1) it is not to be experienced till "the day of the Lord Jesus," and that is the time when the body will be saved, and when body and spirit will be united; and (2) that is the time when the spirit body will be saved, but not a spirit without a body; and if a whole man is to be saved at that time, a part cannot be saved separately.

The work of salvation has its beginning in cleansing man from sin, but is not completed till the reign of death is over, for "it is appointed unto man once to die, but after this the judgment . . . and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Heb. 9: 27, 28. When Jesus comes to bid the sleeping saints live again, salvation will be finished. Real men and women made "equal to the angels," beyond the reach of death, in a home of felicity, with all the sanctified ones of earth, and all the holy angels from above, and Jesus in the midst; all this stands connected with salvation. Saved to die no more. Saved where all are friends, and none are enemies. Saved where peace shall be perpetual.

But in order to be thus saved, we must here be servants of the Lord, not by profession merely, but in reality. "His servants ye are to whom ye yield yourselves to obey." Let us be fully the Lord's servants here, that we may share the great salvation hereafter.

FANCY MINISTERS.

Fancy ministers, like fancy women, are revolting to gospel modesty, and ever bear about their persons the peculiar mark and atmosphere of wantonness. There are no characters so repulsive to virtuous minds, as those who make a profession of the ministry of Jesus for a living; and hence become the fools of religious societies, supple agents of men, instead of God's ministers; having a moral effeminacy which cannot resist popular sin, nor stand up against the customs of the world.

This class of ministers, generally manufactured in our institutions of learning to suit the religious market, have a peculiar appearance, that can easily be recognized. It is not difficult to tell them by their dress, their obsequious smiles, their palaver and affectation, man-pleasing, sycophant look, with which they move about the streets or mingle in society. Their manifest study is to appear pretty, and to win the support of their customers, as fancy clerks behind the counter by superfluous politeness and flattery play upon selfish human nature for selfish ends. They have not that love which is "without dissimulation,—or thinketh no evil," but a studied affectation of love, which is loathsome to God and man, and yet so cheap and tempting to common vanity, that it wins its way, and simple foolish multitudes run after him and call him a blessed, lovely minister! He is so smooth and angel-like to selfish eyes, they little dream that he is one of Jezebel's agents to seduce their souls from God, and draw them over to idolatry, and down to hell! These are "wolves in sheep's clothing;" not altogether in sheep's clothing, for they have not even the outward garb of humility, but in their profession of Christ, and sanctimonious softness, blandness, delicacy, so loving that the people mistake it for the meekness of Jesus. But, alas! their dovelike expression will be found, too late, to be only the subtle charm of the serpent.

The love of Jesus is widely different from this. It admits of terrible denunciation as well as of tender forgiveness. It lashed the multitudes into fury, made them gnash upon him in rage, and nail him to the cross, because he testified that their works were evil.

This fancy love would fellowship sin, cover it up and never would disturb the slumbering conscience of the people.

Hear these ministers preach, and you would imagine you were listening to a stage performance, or the declamation of a student of some graduating class. The discourse is beautiful, and orthodox, but no one would dream that any great interests were really staked upon it, beyond an exhibition of the minister's ability, and the gratification of his audience. Look at the congregation and read their countenances, and you will find what only confirms this impression, that they have no greater interest than to criticise the preacher, and perhaps the style of bonnets and shawls on exhibition there. O if some honest minister of Jesus should speak from that pulpit because he had something to say for God, it would be deemed vulgar and out of place. It would make a sad disturbance. The fancy minister knows it well, so he has the facility of elaborating the most sacred themes, the most pungent truth, so that the people will not think he means anything by it. Yes, he will with a flourish of trumpets attack sins where it is in the popular current, but with his weapons so wrapped with rhetoric as to hurt no one, disturb no conscience, while it has the appearance of doing great execution.

O the lying subtlety of these tools of men, who profess to minister divine truth, while they lull their churches to sleep by pampering their carnal appetites, instead of feeding their souls with the bread of life! O how unlike the preaching of Jesus and apostles, that cross which is a "stumbling block to Jew and foolishness to the Greek!" What splendor of oratory, what magnificence of style, what lovely gestures, what graceful attitudes, all to show the studied presumption of a heart which dares to mock God with lies, and sport with the damnation of souls!

HE PLAYS CROQUET.

Yes, this representative of Jesus, who fasted forty days, was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, sweat drops of blood, suffered and died on the cross, weighed down by the sin of a world, this representative of Jesus, see at croquet playing! See this rollicking, jesting, type of Jesus! He says we must "rejoice always." Paul said rejoice only in the Lord. But he says rejoice in croquet playing. and in the amusements of the world! O how meet a companion of worldling now! Christ and Belial are joined together! "All things to all men!" Yes, he is!

His india-rubber conscience can fit any place or custom whatever, a sense Paul did not mean.

No language can do justice to such a deceiver. He constitutes the closest resemblance to the original serpent which seduced our first parents, that this world affords!—The Stumbling Stone.

PURITANS AND PILGRIMS.

Sometimes we hear the Pilgrims of Massachusetts berated for their persecuting spirit, and are told that they hung the Quakers and whipped the Baptists. They never did any such thing. The Pilgrims, after maintaining independency in England for a while, fled to Leyden, in Holland, where they existed for a few years as a church fraternity, under the ministry of the celebrated John Robinson. But not being satisfied with their position, they returned to England and set sail for the New World, in two small vessels, as they would now be called, the Mayflower and Speedwell. They landed in Plymouth harbor Dec 21, 1620. They were about one hundred in number, and about one-half of their number died of hardship the first winter. They entered into compact and organized themselves into a commonwealth, before they planted their feet on the Rock of Plymouth. They were a noble band of Christian refugees. They and their successors constituted the Plymouth colony. They, and they alone, were the Pilgrims of New England. I know of no evidence that they ever persecuted good men who dissented from their religious opinions. If they did so to any extent, it could not have been with rigor.

The Puritans, so called, were another colony. They landed in Salem a few years later, and commenced their first settlement there. They soon extended their settlements to Boston, Charlestown and Newton, now Cambridge. These men were Puritans, with a sprinkling of Episcopalians among them. They were not pilgrims, or refugees, as the good people of Plymouth were, but were adventurers, seeking, in the spirit of enterprise, to better their condition and extend the English type of christian civilization. These two colonies remained distinct and separate colonial government, for nearly a hundred years. It was the Puritans of the Massachusetts Bay colony that persecuted the Quakers and Baptists, and banished Roger Williams. It is true, the early fathers of Massachusetts, of both colonies, were Puritans, or Trinitarian Congregationalists in faith, in the main; but their experiences were different. The Plymouth people were religious refugees, driven from their native land by a fanatical spirit of persecution; they became religious wanderers or pilgrims, before they reached their wilderness home at Plymouth. Not so the people of the Massachusetts Bay colony. They were not religious pilgrims, but Puritanical adventurers, seeking to do good and mend their own fortunes.—Watchman and Reflector.

I AM SAVED.

I am saved! Yes, I am saved, saved, by the grace of God, from sin and death to live forever with Jesus, and angels, and the ransomed throng, in paradise restored. I have been washed in the blood which cleanseth from all sin, and baptized in "the peace of God which passeth all understanding." I feel it in every fibre of my frame.

Gently as the waters of the stream that winds its way through yonder wood and meadow flow on with a soft murmuring sound, so the waves of peace roll over my my soul. I am lifted above the cares and trials that used to disturb and annoy me, and weariness and pain have no power to mar my peace while following in the footprints of the Master.

Everything seems changed; all nature is wreathed in smiles and burthened with music. The soft notes of the winged songsters sound sweeter, and the chirping of the cricket after the twilight hour falls more sweetly on my ear. The air seems more soft and balmy, while the gentle zephyrs that fan my brow breathe of music, and the wild winds that rudely sway the branches of the forest trees have a soothing sound like the cradle song of infancy. The waters that rush foamingly over the rocks and stones in their channeled bed have a strangely musical sound. Every ray of sunlight and every moonbeam that crosses my path seems to smile upon me. My heart is touched with the spirit of adoration and worship. It rises in prayer and praise to God, the Creator of the universe. "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God; when shall I come and appear before God?"

My will is lost in his. I have no desire to do anything or to be anything but what he wants me to. My daily prayer is, "Teach me to do thy will; for thou art my God." I would not choose a path for my feet to walk in, for I want the Lord to lead me. It matters little where I go, or what I suffer, if his smile rests upon me and his blessing attends me. I feel that I can patiently endure, God helping me, whatever he sees fit in his all-wise providence to call me to pass through, to purge the dross from my nature and make me like Jesus. I want to be like him. I must be. Nothing short of his likeness reflected in me will ever satisfy me. Jesus is mine and I am his. My heart responds to no voice but his.

"I am in his favor, in his keeping,
Evermore to be his own,
Safely waking, safely sleeping,
Till he shall in glory come."

I long for his coming. And while in joyful anticipation I ask, Will he come soon? echo answers, Soon; and my heart replies, "Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus," and come quickly.

MATERIALISM.

There is a conflict going on between spiritualism and materialism. They are antagonisms. Relative to the construction of man, physically and theologically, materialism must be true.

Man is created in the image of his Maker. Formed from the dust of the earth. No spiritism here.

God breathed into his nostrils the something that made him a living man.

This same material man was put upon trial for life. He lost it in consequence of disobedience, and his materialism was reduced to the dust, from which he was formed. Nothing had left the material man but the something that made him live. Thus we find man in death.

But has not the spirit-man, the immaterial man, escaped the real, material man at death? Nothing has left the man but his spirit,—breath. No spirit entity to go. The man without breath is in the grave. The material man, and all the man there is, is in the grave.

So Christ materially tasted death for every material man, that every material man might be rescued from the grave. No atonement for any spirit entity, but for materialism, that had fallen to dust under the sentence of God himself.

All that are materially in their graves, are to hear the voice of the Son of God and materially come forth; they that have done good to life.

No provision in the Bible to save a spirit entity, or an immortal soul. The provisions of the gospel are for the specific purpose of giving dead men life. Hence the necessity of a resurrection of the dead, or all have perished. Could a spirit entity perish?

O let us be literal, material men, and be contented with Bible redemption through the resurrected material Christ.

IN JESUS I TRUST.

Jesus, thou art still my Savior,
I will trust thee day by day;
It shall be my great endeavor
E'er to walk in thine own way.
Though the path may all be darkness,
And the way seem lone and drear,
Still in thee is joy and gladness,
I will neither doubt nor fear.

Still my aim shall be to serve thee,
I my cross for thee will bear;
Thou hast promised to be with me,
Thou wilt every burden share.
Soon earth's trials will be over,
Soon the day of rest will come;
Then I hope to dwell forever
In that happy, peaceful home.

Yes, behold! the light is dawning,
Soon the clouds will pass away;
Joyfully I hail the morning
Of that bright, eternal day;
Then around the throne in glory,
Everlasting praise I'll sing;
Thanks to Him who gave the vict'ry,
Glory to my God and King.

A LITTLE INCONSISTENT.

Many good people admit that Jesus will come again personally to our earth to raise the dead and judge the world in righteousness; and when asked why they believe so, will say, Because the Bible teaches it, and yet deny that it is possible for any to know anything about when he will come; thus setting aside all historic, chronologic, and consecutive prophecy, that leads the Bible student down step by step from Babylon to the judgment of the great day.

Their inconsistency is apparent, for if the statements in the Bible that teach that he will come can be believed by them, why can they not believe by the same authority when he will come? They identify themselves with that class of unbelief that characterized the Jews, and for which they were condemned. Luke 19: 44.

But their inconsistency partakes largely of the spiritualistic order of faith, by accepting nothing as proof, only what their own minds approve. Unhappy and misguided ones! They have been caught in one of Satan's snares, supposing it will excuse them from the duty of believing and obeying the truth; thus making one inconsistency justify another; or, trying to make out of two wrongs one right.

We weep over such misguided ones. We pray for them, that they may recover themselves from this dreadful snare before the day of wrath shall come and disclose the work they are doing, before it is too late.

WORDS OF CHEER.

"And we desire that every one of you do show the same diligence to the full assurance of hope unto the end."—HEB. 6: 11.

We know that we shall not lose our reward if we are faithful and obedient. And surely if we have the "blessed hope," we shall always strive to be diligent in every good word and work. Let us obey always in all things the commands of Jesus. Be encouraged to press on a short time, and then we shall be of that happy number who will enter into the kingdom with all the saints.

Have you been tried and tempted, and ready to give up in despair? Take courage, for there is hope and mercy yet for you. For "beloved, we are persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation." "For God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labor of love, in that ye have ministered to the saints and do minister."

Fear not, for "who is he that shall harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good?" "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them." It is time for us to lift up our heads and rejoice, for the time of our redemption draws near.

The signs are multiplying, the nations are angry, the earth trembles as at the approach of the "Lord of the whole earth." Be ye therefore ready, for the great day is near—"it is near, and hasteth greatly."

Webster, Mass. S. S. CHAMBERLAIN.

LETTER FROM O. BENDIXON.

BRO. GRANT:—I have often felt it my duty to let the brethren know something about my missionary work. Will you be pleased to give the following lines a place in the columns of the Crisis?

In the fall of 1867, while laboring as missionary in the Mariner's church, New York city, I was impressed with the truth that Jesus was soon to come again to this earth. I became acquainted with a Sister T—— at the same time, who told me that her church or brethren did not believe in man's inherent immortality, nor that the dead were conscious between death and the resurrection. This was a new doctrine to me, but I was determined to lay aside all commentators and notes and let the Bible explain itself.

My missionary field was one of the worst in the city, and I had not much time for studying during the day, but thank God, the night was mine, and for almost three or four months I spent the most of the night in reading, studying and praying. I shall never forget the night when the truth was revealed to me that man had no inherent immortality, and consequently would be destroyed. I shouted for joy, and I could glorify God more than ever before in my life, when I saw in the holy Scriptures that God was a God of love and not a demon. This glorious truth I could not hide, and I was soon afterward discharged from the Mission.

In March, I attended the conference in Boston, when I became acquainted with several of the brethren. I then made an application to the Mission Board, through Bro. J. V. Himes, for help and support while going as a missionary to my native country, Norway, for the purpose of preaching the soon coming of Jesus and other kindred truths. I must say that I met with a very willing response from the Board. After traveling some in the eastern States of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Connecticut, I returned to New York.

On the 28th of May I left this country for Norway, where I arrived the 14th of June. I fully believed that the Lord would come the next fall, and I went to work at once. All went on well for a while, but my own success was too much for the devil. Opposition and persecution began; letters were written and sent around to warn the people against me; all manner of evil speaking was general, and the magistrate in one town threatened me severely; but all in vain. The word of God prospered, and He strengthened me wonderfully.

At this time a severe trial came over me; my means were almost gone; but then I received a letter from the treasurer, George T. Adams, containing a draft for, I think, $83.08. This gladdened my heart, and with new energy I pushed the battle ahead.

In the beginning of November it seemed the devil had determined that I should not go any further. A new persecution more fierce than the first rose against me; every door was shut, and I was left almost alone. In this crisis my means became exhausted, and I was destitute of the necessaries of life. I waited and waited that something should arrive from America, but nothing came.

At last I had to sell some of my little furniture for the sake of sustaining life. My state may better be imagined than I can tell it. The worst of all was that the work of God which had so prospered should cease, and the many souls which had been awakened were now left to themselves; and I am afraid that most of them have fallen away.

I was now obliged to go into some worldly occupation, and in this I prospered; but my peace, my peace went. I felt sore every day, and my wife was grieved. I then determined to give all up and go back to this country and work for the Lord, where I arrived one year ago the last of October, with five dollars in my pocket. I shall never forget the few dear friends that so kindly helped us in our sore trials.

After trying to get something to do in New York, I failed entirely, and by the kindness of two or three brethren, I was able to go to the National Conference in Rochester, N. Y., which was the best I ever enjoyed in my life. While there, some of the brethren suggested that I should go out to Bishop Hill, Ill., and the conference was kind enough to vote that I should receive the collection for my expenses.

I went out there, but after some time failed almost entirely, the reason and cause God knows best. I tried to obtain some work, but failed. Myself and family were left in the most destitute state, depending upon the charity of others. I then began to get disheartened and downcast. I went to Chicago for the purpose of obtaining something to do, and then preach the truth. I went on for a while preaching, but had to stop as I had no means.

Now came the time when I was tried to the uttermost. I began to lose faith in christianity. I thought all was a humbug. I cannot say more about it; but now praise God with all my powers. My life is offered anew to his service. May the Lord keep me and make me strong through his grace.

Now, dear brethren, I feel the burden on me for my countrymen. There are in Chicago alone from thirty to forty thousand of them. Wisconsin, Iowa and Minnesota are almost full of them; and only one, so far as I know, to preach our faith in their own tongue.

We have not a tract to scatter among them, not one to preach to them, to awaken them to the fact that the Lord is soon coming. O, is there not some one who will help us? Dear Lord, we appeal to thee. The earth is thine, and the fulness thereof. Move on the hearts of thy people. Open the way for us, so that the truth, which is thine, may find its way in among our countrymen, and many be saved in the day of the Lord.

I should be very glad to preach to any that would have my labor. Please address O. Bendixon (care of L. Johanson) 15 Hunt St., Chicago, Ill.

☞ It is astonishing what apologies half-christians will make for those worldly inconsistencies which would cover a true believer with the deepest humiliation.

— Base all your actions upon the principle of right. Preserve your integrity of character, and never reckon the cost.

— The forgiveness of God is like the God who grants it—everlasting, all-incomprehensive, immeasurable. No possibility of condemnation. The hand that was against me is now nailed up, as it were, in the court of justice for the protection of the debtor. I now owe everything to the love of God; I owe my whole self. Let Christ dwell in my heart, to guide every glance of the eye, every thought of the mind.

— The flower of youth never appears more beautiful than when it bends toward the Sun of Righteousness.

— Holiness maketh men's persons and presence dreadful to the wicked by reason of that grace and majesty which God putteth into it.

— The most lovely in the sight of God is that tenderness of spirit which fears before the Lord always.

— "Sacred to God," is to be inscribed on all our possessions, in the use of which we are to consult his honor and acquiesce in his arrangements.

— The three things, "in the flesh," "under law," and "sinning," always go together. Where one is, all are found. And the three things, "in the spirit," "under grace," and "holiness," always go together. Where one is, all are found.

Go scatter beside all waters,
Nor sicken at hope deferred,
Let never a soul by thy dumbness
Be lost for want of a word.

— The memory of good actions is the starlight of the soul.

— Religion need not, should not make me gloomy. What says the Author of it to his disciples? "These things I say unto you, that your joy may be full."

— There is no truth more important and few less thought of than this: the more we forsake simplicity in anything, the more we multiply the means of corruption and error.

— Good words cost nothing but are worth much.

— Enjoy the blessings of this day if God sends them; and the evils bear patiently and sweetly. For this day only is ours; we are dead to yesterday, and we are not born to-morrow.

We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;
In feelings, not in figures on a dial.
We should count time by heart throbs. He most lives
Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.

— If you are disquieted at anything, you should consider with yourself, is the thing of that worth, that for it I should so disturb myself, and lose my peace and tranquility?

— One of the greatest hindrances to personal piety—that which acts out the heart and soul of true religion—is an unrestrained and unchastened exercise of the tongue.

— A great safeguard to youth and age—meditation upon the word and ways of God.—

FOOLISH DEATHS.

At the banquet to Dickens, given by the New York Press at Delmonico's, April 18, 1868, there sat at the table, besides Dickens himself, Henry J. Raymond, George W. Demers, Henry E. Sweetser and George Wakeman, all prominent journalists, and all lying now in their graves.

Not one of these men died like a hero. All but Charles Dickens died young; all died unnecessarily. Why should young or middle-aged men die? The Creator protests against it. He does not want them to die. He has emphatically declared that he takes "no pleasure in the death of him that dieth; but that he should turn from his wicked way and live." All nature shouts dissent against such exit from earth. Think of it! Mr. Raymond falling down in his room gorged to death. Dickens dying at eventide while, or soon after, filling his stomach with food. It is shameful for men to die as these men died. To speak plainly, it is cowardly. Raymond died with thirty years of work in him, Dickens with fifteen or twenty. Neither was over-worked; they were simply over-fed. Nearly all our hard thinkers are in some form gluttons. To be a glutton, a man need not necessarily eat too much food. He may only need to eat at improper hours, or to eat food which is unhealthily cooked, or while eating moderately as compared with others, to eat more than his stomach can digest, producing thereby uneasiness in bowels, fulness of head, twinges of pain in legs and feet, sharp flashes of electric light through the eyes, catarrh, ringing through the ears, sleeplessness, fretfulness, despondency indisposition to society, to demonstrate that he is gluttonous. When added to inordinate or improper eating one comes to chew or smoke tobacco, or to drink moderately yet every day, of some vinous, brewed or distilled liquor, then doubly certain is it that he is gluttonous.

Over-work of brain very seldom exists. Over-taxation of stomach is very common with our thinking men. As brain and stomach are organically very intimate, and so are functionally sympathetic, over-taxing the latter debilitates the former. Almost all disorders of the brain are the consequence or result of derangements of some other organ or organs; of none so frequently as the stomach. Never has a man died of apoplexy, who kept his stomach healthy. Never one of paralysis unless by injuries caused by casuality. The stomach kept healthy, all the organs in the body will remain healthy. Food healthily digested makes good blood, this makes life force, and with plenty of this on hand and realizable, health is sure. With health one is independent. I would rather have it than garnered gold. Pearls in a desert are not half as good to a thirsty man as cold water. Stocks and bonds are not of par value to a nervous dyspeptic. Existence ought to be sweet, and life that is cultured should be very precious to him that holds it as his own. Whoever will eat to live instead of living to eat will find himself able to work hard, stand the rack of thought, and live to old age to enjoy the fruit of his hands.—Laws of Life.

WHAT IT COSTS TO HAVE THE HEADACHE.—Dr. Holmes, in a recent address on "mental action," relates that an ingenious tailor he knew once exclaimed, on seeing a customer leave his store without buying a coat, "If it had not been for this miserable headache, I'd had a coat on that man's back before he got out over my doorstep." This but illustrates the folly of having headaches. They are expensive luxuries, in which only the very rich can indulge. Men and women who do the world's work, who think for it, plan its reforms, promote its progress or add to its resources, should at least know enough of hygiene to be able to avoid headaches. A very careful calculation shows that headaches cost this country millions of dollars every year.—Herald of Health.

EFFECTS OF GODFREY'S CORDIAL.—An inquest was held on Tuesday last, at Nottingham, on a child five months old, who, having suffered from diarrhea, had Godfrey's Cordial administered to it by its mother. The child succumbed, and a post-mortem examination showed that death had been accelerated by opiates. A verdict in accordance was given, and the mother was reprimanded by the coroner, for her conduct in administering the "remedy."—London Med. Times and Gazette.

☞ To live long, it is necessary to live slowly.

TEACHERS, above all things, says ex-President Hill of Harvard College, should have regard for the physical capacities of children. No machinery is so delicate in its structure, or is called on to produce work so fine, as the brains of school children. Their capacities of endurance are very limited at the age when the faculties are developing. There is more danger to be apprehended from long continuance in study than from close application for a brief period. In this particular the half is better than the whole.

A BAD FIRE.

"Jones, have you heard of the fire that burned up the man's house and lot?"

"No, Smith, where was it?"

"Here, in the city."

"What a misfortune to him. Was it a good house?"

"Yes, a nice house and lot—a good home for any family."

"What a pity. How did the fire take?"

"The man played with fire, and thoughtlessly set it himself."

"How silly! Did you say the lot was burned too?"

"Yes, lot and all; all gone, slick and clean."

"That is singular. It must have been a terribly hot fire—and then I don't well see how it could burn the lot."

"No, it was not a large fire, nor a very hot fire. Indeed, it was so small that it attracted but little attention, and did not alarm anybody. The man for whom it did so much mischief, saw it all the while, and thought it a little matter. A few drops of water would have put it out at any time. In fact, it often went out of itself, and the man lighted it again."

"What for, I should like to know?"

"Oh, he didn't seem to think what harm it was doing. He liked the smell of fire, and amused himself with the pretty smoke."

"But how could such a little fire burn up a house and lot? You haven't told me."

"It burned a long time—more than twenty years. And, though it seemed to consume very slowly, yet it wore away about one hundred and fifty dollars' worth every year, till it was all gone."

"I can't quite understand you yet. Tell me where the fire was kindled, and all about it."

"Well, then, it was kindled in the end of a cigar. The cigars cost him, he himself told me, twelve and a half dollars a month, or one hundred and fifty dollars a year, and that, in twenty-one years, would amount to $3,150, besides all the interest. Now, the money was worth at least ten per cent., and at that rate it would double about once in seven years. So that the whole sum would be more than ten thousand dollars. That would buy a fine house and lot, even in Chicago. It would pay for a large farm in the country. Don't you pity the family of the man who has so slowly burned up their home?"

"Wheugh! I guess now you mean me, for I have smoked more than twenty years. But I didn't know it cost so much as that. And I haven't any house of my own. Have always rented—thought I was too poor to own a house. And all because I have been burning it up! What a fool I have been!"

"There is still another idea."

"What is that?"

"You may live twenty years longer, and burn up another home."

"I see. I ought to leave off smoking."

"Yes, many smokers feel that they ought to leave off."

"But I mean to give up my cigars, and quit."

"Yes, I have known many to quit—the same man at least a half a dozen times."

"Friend Smith, I tell you I am determined to quit, once and forever, and to break myself completely of the bad habit. I am resolved to put out this fire, never to light it again. I won't burn up another home, that my family so much need, and that I shall need in my old age, and my children after I am dead and gone."

"Well said, Jones! now I trust you will. If you are fully resolved, you can, though I promise you a severe struggle. If you are not fully set in your purpose, the old habit will be too strong for you, and your second house and lot will vanish in smoke.

The boys had better never set a fire which costs so much, and which, though it might be so easily put out, is yet so likely, if once kindled, to keep burning all their lives.—Sunday School Scholar.

PRAISE GOD.

Lo, summer and winter come round,
As God in his bounty decreed;
His blessing enlivens the ground,
And fashions the plant from the seed.
Fair colors for beauty he gives,
And fruit from the dun-colored mold,
Praise him, every creature that lives,
O praise him for all you behold!

A WORD TO BOYS.—Truth is one of the rarest of virtues. Many a youth has been lost to society by allowing falsehood to tarnish his character, and foolishly throwing truth away. Honesty, frankness, generosity, virtue—blessed traits! Be these yours, boys, and you need not fear. You are watched by your elders. Men who are looking for clerks and apprentices, have their eyes on you. If you are upright, steady, and industrious, before long you will find good places, kind masters, and the prospect of a useful life before you.

☞ The CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

IMMUTABLE.

I hear the words of love,
I gaze upon the blood,
I see the mighty sacrifice,
And I have peace with God.

'Tis everlasting peace,
Sure as Jehovah's name;
'Tis stable as his steadfast throne,
For evermore the same.

The clouds may go and come,
And storms may sweep my sky;
This blood-sealed friendship changes not;
The cross is ever nigh.

My love is ofttimes low,
My joy still ebbs and flows;
But peace with him remains the same,
No change Jehovah knows.

I change, he changes not,
The Christ can never die;
His love, not mine, the resting place;
His truth, not mine, the tie.

For the World's Crisis.

HAVE WE ANY SAVIOR?

This question, to some, may seem foolish, but stop a moment; consider it, ponder it, examine it, and see if there is any reason why man should hope for a life of eternal blessedness.

For argument's sake we admit man has immortality; and it is said the effect of having immortality, is eternal life; so all men are immortal, and must live as long as God lives. Admit this premise, and this conclusion must follow. As sinners in the day of judgment will be in the sight of God an abhorrence, it will be said to them, or as we read in Rev. 21: 8, "But the fearful, and unbelieving, . . . shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone." So man must remain in a literal, burning lake of fire, always conscious, always suffering the most excruciating torment and torture possible; therefore the penalty of the law is, to suffer in hell fire forever.

Question. Has any one on whom the law has no claim, ever paid the demand of the law, or entered upon that work?

To illustrate. I owe a man one hundred thousand dollars, and am unable to pay it. The law of the State being such, he takes me and my family, and imprisons us. How long? The law says till the debt is paid. And being confined in prison, I cannot pay the demand or debt, so cannot redeem myself or family. Consequently, we must stay as long as life lasts, as far as I can go toward redeeming myself or family. But a friend comes along, sees our condition, and his heart is moved in our behalf. He inquires about the debt, and offers one half the amount; the law demands the whole. After mature deliberation, he pays the amount. We are set at liberty; in this he is our savior. Had he paid part of it, then backed out, we could not have been released.

Now the application. The demand of the law is eternal torment in hell fire. Do not shudder, dear friend; if you believe the theory, accept it in its legitimate use. Well, the Savior is born, grows to manhood sinless, the law having no claim on him. He offers himself, that through his sufferings man may be redeemed, and live happy in the kingdom of God. So in the fullness of time, the Son of God enters upon the work of paying the debt that man owes to the law in consequence of sin; which being eternal torment, or, to suffer eternally in hell fire, the Son of God must pay the full demand of the law. He must suffer the same kind and amount the sinner would have, or the law is not satisfied. He must have understood the nature of the business he was entering upon, and being the Son of the Highest, could be depended on for the faithful performance of the work of redemption.

And he dies, goes into hell, the lake of fire. O the intense agony, the excruciating pain. Just think, the Lord of glory in such torture for sinful men, and then think how long must he endure such affliction? As long as the sun endureth. Why? Because man is immortal, and cannot die, and must have suffered this length of time. Is not this wondrous love? Who else could think of such a course to save man?

Well, have we a Savior? Has he been heard from since he went into such awful sorrow? We read he died. This commences the work. But look, in a few days we behold him out of hell, appearing to his disciples and the brethren, eating fish and honeycomb. What is the cause of his giving up the work he entered upon, the work of redeeming men from such awful misery? Were the fires of hell too hot for the Son of the Highest? If this be true, then we are without a Savior simply because the demand of the law has never been satisfied; and he who undertook the work of redemption either could not stand the fires of hell, or shirked duty, and left man unredeemed. The conclusion is unavoidable that man has no Savior.

But can this be true? If the premise is true, the conclusion must be; it is unavoidable; man has no Savior. But we hear the apostle Peter exclaim, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, . . . who hath begotten us again unto a lively hope." How? "By the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." 1 Peter 1: 3.

But, Peter, how can that be a lively hope, when the penalty of the law was eternal torment, and Jesus was in hell only three days and nights? Where is the hope, unless he stays as long as the law demands, forever, or eternally? If man has immortality, then Peter is wrong, and we have no Savior; because the law is not satisfied, the debt is unpaid.

Perhaps the apostle John can help us, with Paul's assistance. We read (1 John 3: 4), "Whoso committeth sin, transgresseth also the law, for sin is the transgression of the law." Paul says (Rom. 6: 23), "The wages of sin is death"; not eternally dying; not pain; not sickness, not disease, but death. Is death eternally dying, or to never die? Hear the Son of God to the Revelator (Rev. 1: 18), "I am he that liveth and was dead, and, behold, I am alive forevermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death."

Now what is the law? Hear the Lord to Adam, in the garden of Eden (Gen. 2: 17), "But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it, for in the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die"; not never die, but shalt die. So to die was and is the penalty of the law.

This shows us the truthfulness of Peter's expression, "Begotten us again unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." So Jesus suffered or paid the penalty of the law, which was death, negative of life, came out conqueror over death, and lives to make intercession for us, for you and me. Bless the Lord, we have a Savior, and he has conquered the monster death, and soon will stop his work, and we can live by him (Christ.)

Now here is a conflict between theology and the Bible. The traditions, or theology, men say their fathers taught them, and their ministers teach them so, and their fathers and ministers must be right; they believed thus, so do we.

This is unscriptural. First, the word immortal is found but once in the Bible, and refers to the Lord, in language like this (Tim. 1: 17), "Now unto the King eternal, immortal." The word immortality is found but five times in the Bible, and always when referring to man as something sought for, or to be put on; as, "When this mortal shall put on immortality." 1 Cor. 15: 53. "To those who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, honor, immortality," their reward will be "eternal life." Rom. 2: 7. "So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality," not the incorruption put off corruption; not the immortal putting off mortal; but corruption putting on incorruption; "this mortal put on immortality; then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written [Isaiah 25: 8], Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" 1 Cor. 15: 54–55.

Again, in 2 Tim. 1: 8–10, we read, "Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, . . . but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel, according to the power of God, who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling; not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began; but is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." This immortality we only have in prospect, by patient continuance in well doing.

Here is a positive declaration that death has been abolished by Jesus Christ; and as death was the penalty of the law, and it reigned from Adam, because Adam violated the law, he could not redeem himself from the law, being under the condemnation of death, not eternal torment; hence must die unless some one dies for him. But as at that time there was no one on whom the law had no claim, consequently none to deliver, he suffered the penalty of the law, and died. As by his disobedience he became subject to death, his progeny could not be better than the tree that bore them naturally; so they die; and as far as man is concerned, his life is forfeited, and without Jesus must be left in perpetual death, and God be just. So we read, "Forasmuch as ye know that we were redeemed, not with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers, but with the precious blood of Christ; who was verily foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you, who by him [Christ] do believe in God, that raised him [Christ] from the dead, and gave him glory, that your faith and hope might be in God; seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the tradition of your fathers, not in obeying the truth through the Spirit." "Thy word is truth." His word endureth forever.

So we have a Savior, even our Lord Jesus Christ. "And this is the word, which by the gospel is preached unto you," Jesus, and the resurrection. Blessed be the Lord, we have a living Savior, a glorious hope.

New York City. G. W. SMITH.

"TIME MEASUREMENTS."

As others may be involved in the same difficulty, we insert and reply to the following criticism on our recent article on Daniel's weeks:—

"CHICOPEE, MASS., Oct. 28th, 1870.

Mr. Wm. Sheldon,—Dear Bro.:—In the Crisis of Oct. 19, I notice an article on the measurement of time. The weeks of Dan. 9 is the portion of the article I refer to. Dan. 9: 25. From the going forth of the command to the Messiah are sixty-nine weeks or 483 years; that is to say, from Christ's birth back to the going forth of the command 483 years elapsed, also from Christ's birth to the first of Cyrus, 483 years elapsed. Ezra 1: 1. The first year of Cyrus, king of Persia (Ezra 1: 1), was 559 years B. C. Or will you have him as king of Babylon? Cyrus took Babylon 538 B. C. He made the command 536 B. C. Cyrus was defeated in battle, and had his head cut off by Queen Tomyris 530 years B. C., forty-seven years before you say he issued his edict of return and rebuilding the temple. It cannot mean the younger Cyrus, son of Darius' mother, for he died 401 B. C., a young man.

These are sound historical facts, and can be well maintained. Cyrus conquered Crœsus 548 B. C. I want the truth. But truth must agree, whether it be profane or sacred.

Other errors occur in the article, but one thing at a time. Should like to hear from you, as one of your preachers advised me to write you. Yours in love,

M. L. STEBBINS."

THE REPLY.

Your mistake consists in adopting Usher's erroneous and exploded chronology, which he arranged when but eighteen years old, the defects of which are pointed out in "Adventism" pp. 196–208; and a corrected table will be found in the same work on pp. 300–310. We prefer the chronology that agrees with the Bible, to one that positively clashes with it. The following are samples of Usher's defects:

1. Paul gives "about 450 years" for the reign of the judges, while Usher gives about 150. Which is right?

2. Usher begins the seventy years' captivity in the fourth year of the reign of Jehoiakim, king of Jerusalem. Jehoiakim reigned eleven years in all, or seven years after Usher begins the captivity. Then his son Jehoiachin reigned three months; then Zedekiah reigned eleven years; then the city was smitten. So, if Usher is right, a space of eighteen years passed after the beginning of the seventy years' captivity, before the city was smitten, at the end of Zedekiah's reign; but this is seven years too much time, if Ezekiel is correct:

"In the five and twentieth year of our captivity, . . . the fourteenth year after the city was smitten," etc. Ezek. 40: 1.

Here is positive proof that only twenty-five years of the captivity had passed, fourteen years after the city was smitten, thus establishing the fact that the captivity began only eleven years before the smiting of the city, instead of eighteen. Now either Ezekiel is mistaken seven years, or the chronology of Usher is here seven years out of the way. Can Usher be right while clashing with Paul and Ezekiel?

3. Usher's method of making the "command" to restore and build Jerusalem B. C. 536, was by counting the full reign of kings, as recorded in history, which footed us just 536 years between Cyrus' command and our A. D.; but he overlooked the historic fact that several of these kings reigned jointly with their predecessors for several years, and counted the entire reign of each one, thus counting the same time twice; whereas the time that a king reigned with his predecessor should be subtracted from the count; to illustrate; if ten kings reign ten years each, and each king reigns one year jointly with his predecessor, the sum total of their reign is not ten times ten, but we must subtract one year from the reign of each king, else we count the same time twice. When this is done with Usher's line of kings, we have just 483 years from Cyrus' "commandment" to Christ's birth, B. C. 5, agreeing precisely with Gabriel, and proving the "commandment" to have been given B. C. 488, instead of 536. Historians give Usher's erroneous chronology in naming events. W. S.

EUREKA.

BRO. GRANT:—For eight or ten years doubts have existed in my mind in reference to the legitimacy of the application of the word "chambers," as recorded in Isa. 26: 20. I had noticed that in speaking or writing, either in the east or west, it was a common usage among our people to make those chambers synonymous with meeting the Lord in the air (1 Thess. 4: 17), and the "sea of glass" (Rev. 15: 2); but was not prepared to controvert its correctness. On all obscure passages, patient investigation, thorough research, persevering and laborious study, diligently comparing Scripture, is, to me, the only sure way of arriving ultimately at the truth.

Adopting this course with the passage referred to, I think now that my doubts were well founded, and a better (because more harmonious) application discovered.

In the epistle of Clement, Bishop of Rome, the passage is rendered thus—"Enter into thy chambers for a little space, till my anger and indignation shall pass away; and I will remember the good day, and will raise you up out of your graves." Does he quote from the Septuagint version? Here "chambers" and "graves" are used as synonyms. This corresponds with Job 14: 13—"O that thou wouldest hide me in the grave, that thou wouldest keep me secret, until thy wrath be past, that thou wouldest appoint me a set time and remember me." Thus what Job so ardently desired, and earnestly asked, God by the mouth of his prophet Isaiah promises he will grant, and do; not only for him, but for all his people. He has "appointed a day" (a set time), will remember the good day, and bring them up out of their graves. Not out of purgatory; not out of paradise; not out of an intermediate state; or down from heaven; but up out of their graves. Till then, Job says (17: 13), "If I wait, the grave is my house."

In Prov. 7: 27, we find the phrase, "going down to the chambers of death." But the query may arise—How can the grave with any propriety be called a chamber? Surely it is more like a pit, or dungeon. True, if we speak of a grave of modern times; but anciently it was customary, in many countries, to drill into the solid rock of the mountain or hill-side, and then on either side of this horizontal shaft cut niches for the dead; and these were sometimes termed chambers, as in Isa. 26: 20. The time of coming forth, undoubtedly, is synchronous with 1 Thess. 4: 17, and Rev. 15: 2. G. W. STETSON.

Lift up your heads, ye weeping ones, nor sigh,
'Tis Jesus comes, redemption draweth nigh.

We long to see thee, blest One, on thy throne;
We want to know thee as in heaven thou'rt known;
O hasten, Lord, the great and glorious day,—
Beneath thy cross we watch and wait and pray.

A wondering world inquires, Why is it soon
The judgment comes? I dread its fearful doom;
You want to see the Savior—it cannot, cannot be,
I have no hope, although he died for me.

They say we have robes already kept and white,
That we may meet thee in thy cloud of light;
'Tis true, in part, thus Bunyan's Pilgrim spoke;
When he got home, he said, the Lord would know his coat.

These robes were given to us by our Lord,
Wrought out and washed in his most precious blood;
To keep them undefiled must be our care,
That when he comes we may his glory share;
O why such joy? your looking will be vain,
'Tis useless, Jesus will not come to reign.

Away such doctrine, we have the holy word,
That prophets spake, and they were taught of God;
The Savior's word, that he would come again,
And take his loved ones home, with him to reign.
Beloved John, on Patmos, then declared
He saw the holy city for the saints prepared.

Like weary pilgrims we to Zion come,
Cheered on by hope we soon shall be at home;
The signs proclaim His advent now is near;
Rejoice! ye saints, your Jesus will appear;
No more distress or sorrow shall you share,
No tears, no death, or parting will be there.

THE SOUL.

A SCRIPTURAL VIEW OF THE TERM.

"Hear, and your soul shall live."—ISA. 55: 3.

I am aware that objections are made to presenting scripture in a different light from the commonly received opinion. On this point I would say, or ask all candid hearts, As everlasting life is promised, do you desire to obtain it in the way men would tell you to get it, or in the Lord's appointed way?

In examining the term "soul," the Bible shall be my guide. In Gen. 2: 7, the first man created is termed "a living soul." This man was composed of earth, and a "breath of life," and this body formed out of the dust of the ground, by a breath of life being breathed into his nostrils, became a living soul; and in verse nineteen of the same chapter, this soul was named Adam; and though a living soul, it was possible for this living soul to die in case of disobedience.

We all agree that Adam, the living soul, could be seen and felt, and this was a visible and tangible object. Here, then, we have a man, by Paul termed "the first man Adam," a visible and tangible being, in the language of the Bible declared to be "a living soul." Gen. 2: 7; 1 Cor. 15: 45. Again, if we read about Abraham and Sarai (Gen. 12: 5), "And the souls that they had gotten in Haran," we must come to the conclusion that "souls" which they got in Haran, and took into Canaan, were visible and tangible objects. Now turn to Gen. 46: 5–27, and read about Jacob and his offspring, and in v. 18 you find Leah the mother of sixteen souls, and the sons born unto Jacob by Rachel were seven souls (v. 25, and v. 26), "All the souls that came with Jacob into Egypt, which came out of his loins, including Jacob's sons' wives, all the souls were threescore and six." Adding the sons of Joseph to these, makes the number of sons, children, persons, men, or souls, "which came into Egypt, seventy souls." Here also are souls, visible and tangible beings, termed sons born unto Jacob, or souls who journeyed with him into Egypt.

In Ex. 12: 19, we read—"For whosoever eateth that which is unleavened, even that soul shall be cut off." Again, "No soul of you shall eat blood."—Lev. 17: 12. Here, again, is a soul, in the shape or form of a person, an object that must eat in order to sustain life. Now turn to Lev. 23: 30 and read—"And whatsoever soul it be that does any work in that same day, the same will I destroy from among his people." According to v. 23, this soul was one of the children of Israel, and not an invisible, indestructible thing, that has neither shape nor form.

If we turn to Num. 31: 28, we find that persons, beeves, asses and sheep, are termed souls. Here it stands in the Bible, and whatever we may fancy about immortal souls, here again a soul is a visible, tangible, living creature, quite different from the idea that the soul is something entirely distinct from the body, is invisible, and has neither shape, form, nor parts, and would therefore more properly be called nothing, than something.

In Joshua 11: 11, we read—"And they smote all the souls that were therein with the edge of the sword, utterly destroying them; there was not one left to breathe." From this passage we learn (1), That a soul can go to war. (2) That a soul can be smitten or killed by the sword. (3) That a soul may be destroyed; and that a soul that does not breathe is dead. Job did not teach the immortality of the soul when he said (Job 7: 15), "So that my soul chooseth strangling rather than my life," but intimates that all living things are souls. Job 12: 10.

Psalm 22: 20, 29, is positive proof against the immortality of the soul. Could David have believed the soul to be something separate from the body and immortal, and then say, "Deliver my soul from the sword." "And none can keep alive his own soul." Hence the prayer "to deliver their souls from death, and to keep them alive in famine." Ps. 33: 19. David did not, by the term soul, mean something besides himself that was immortal, when he said, "But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave." And again—"For thou hast delivered my soul from death." Ps. 49: 15, 56: 13. In Ps. 78: 50, he without hesitation speaks about souls not being spared from death, because they were given over to the pestilence. Can we, then, not having one passage in the whole Bible that speaks about an immortal soul, still contend that the soul is immortal, and cannot be seen or touched. Of course we know pestilence cannot take hold upon an immortal being, thing, or nothing. The term nothing comes nearest to the immortal-soul theory of anything I know of. Because (1) a thing that cannot be seen, nor touched, and has neither shape, form, nor parts, is about as complete a nothing as one might wish to have, and (2), if we take away the shape, form, parts, and all that can be seen of a man, we leave just about nothing.

Now we come to the point. Theologians divide man into two parts, visible and invisible; and term the visible, body, and the invisible, soul. Now if there were an invisible part of man that the Bible would call soul, then there might be some reasonable argument brought up in favor of the immortality of the soul; but if the visible part is termed soul, then the argument for the immortality of the soul, as yet, falls to the ground at once; and we must wait for immortality until the resurrection of the dead, for that is the time specified by Paul (1 Cor. 15: 54) when immortality shall be put on. All that we have to do now is, to see which of the two parts, pointed out by men, the Bible terms soul. Here I shall quote six passages from different ages of the world (to which scores of others might be added), to prove that the visible part of man is termed soul. Hence the quotations follow.

Referring to the patriarchal age we read—"All the souls that came with Jacob into Egypt, ... besides Jacob's sons' wives, all the souls were threescore and six."—Gen. 46: 26. In the time of the law we read—"And levy a tribute unto the Lord, of the men of war, which went out to battle; one soul of five hundred, both of the persons, and of the beeves, and of the asses, and of the sheep."—Num. 31: 28. In the Psalms we read, "Lest he tear my soul like a lion, rending it in pieces."*—Ps. 7: 2. In the time of the prophets, we read in plain terms: "To slay the souls that should not die, and to save alive the souls that should not live; and to destroy souls to get dishonest gain."—Ezek. 13: 19, 22: 27. Has it ever been known or seen that an invisible, indestructible thing was destroyed in order to steal its property? The passage we quote from the Savior's time reads thus: "And I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry."—Luke 12: 19. In the apostolic age, when many were "pricked to the heart" by Peter's preaching, we read, "And the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls." Acts 2: 41.

This plain Bible truth, which is not the one-fourth that could be produced, brings it down to the following points: (1) That souls may need a place of abode, as was the case with Jacob's sons, all together threescore and six souls traveling to Egypt, having shape and form, or they could not have been numbered. (2) It shows that the whole body, or shape, form, and parts of man, which can be torn in pieces, in the Bible is termed soul. (3) That souls are visible objects, that can be in the way of persons desiring to steal, but that can be destroyed and put out of the way in order that stealing might be done undetected, and the thief go unpunished. (4) That a soul, in order to live, must eat and drink, and may be glad to have laid up store enough to keep from starvation. The store to save the soul from starving must be laid up in barns. We read, "This will I do: I will pull down my barns, and build greater; and there will I bestow all my fruits and my goods. And I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry."

This, then, brings the whole matter down to one point, which cannot be denied, nor contradicted with anything, but the theology of men, independent of, and contrary to, Bible proof; and that is this,—that the visible, tangible form of man, with all its parts given to him by the Creator, is in God's word termed soul.

Plato, who was born nearly five hundred years before Christ, in a heathen land, was one of the first advocates of the immortality of the soul, and it seems to me no wonder that it took a heathen philosopher, who never saw a Bible, to get it into his head that an immortal soul, a being that could live separate from the body, was imprisoned in the body, and in death left the body, took its flight, some say, its everlasting flight, to some region "beyond the bounds of time and space," but to enter the same prison again, at the resurrection; because the Bible surely is not in favor of such a doctrine.

Two things are now brought down to an absolute certainty, viz., (1) That the terms immortal soul, never dying, or deathless soul, are not found in the Bible. (2) That visible, tangible beings, that can eat, drink, starve, or be killed, are in the Bible called souls. From this it follows that all the arguments for the immortality of the soul are based on inference. No one can say the Bible uses the words immortal soul, to tell us what we possess besides a mortal body, or as a something about which we should be chiefly concerned. Inference about this weighty matter is all that can be produced.

One of the strongest passages from which the immortality of the soul is inferred, is Matt. 10: 28, where Christ said—"And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul." And in this way: If men cannot kill the soul, then it must be immortal. This may be said to be good logic. Now read the second: "But rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." A soul that for certain reasons can and will be destroyed, can certainly not be immortal. But the objector says, Destruction does not mean death, so that a soul may be destroyed and yet live. Well, then, one thing is certain, that destruction means destruction, at least; and yet the advocates of the immortal-soul doctrine contend that the soul is indestructible. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die," is the language of the Bible; and, the soul is immortal, is found elsewhere, surely.

According to Matt. 26: 26, a man may lose his own soul, from which it is also inferred that the soul must be immortal. Now turn to the parallel passage in Luke 8: 25, and find that that soul is the person himself, which this passage clearly proves: "For what is a man advantaged if he gain the whole world and lose himself." "Himself," then, is the soul that may be lost or destroyed, agreeing precisely with David, who called upon his soul, or himself, to bless the Lord for redeeming its life from destruction. Ps. 103: 4.

The thief on the cross is frequently brought in as proof of the immortality of the soul. Here is only inference also. Christ said—"To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." From this it is inferred that only the body of the thief died, but the soul went to heaven to remain there with Christ forever in a deathless state. Now according to this inference, the soul as a separate entity should enjoy Christ's presence, while the body would return to its mother earth; and hence it would follow that it was the invisible, immaterial soul that said to Christ—"Lord, remember me when"—for it was the being that received the promise which requested Christ to be remembered when he would come in his kingdom. Now, I ask, was it the soul as an invisible part of man, to which Christ said, "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise"? or, was it to the man whom they saw with their eyes, and heard with their ears, asking a favor of Christ?

According to the inference generally drawn from this passage, all good men when they die go immediately to heaven, to be with Christ. Peter, at the day of Pentecost, more than a thousand years after the death of David, said—"David is not ascended into the heavens"; and Christ spoke of the fathers, and said—"They are dead." These passages, then, clearly show that the inference drawn from the thief on the cross is incorrect, and we must look for something in harmony with the Bible throughout.

Let us keep in mind that Christ said—"My kingdom is not of this world"; and that the thief said to Christ—"Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." Hence the thief asked for something which could not be fulfilled until Christ should come, as Paul says (2 Tim. 4: 1), "at his appearing and his kingdom." Then, from Rev. 2: 7, we learn that there will be a paradise in which the tree of life will grow; and Rev. 22 shows that the tree of life in the paradise of God will stand beside a stream on the new earth, which (chap. 21) is described with all its blessings. To enjoy the blessings of this kingdom, believers must be raised from the dead, and in this Christ's promise is to remember them, when he says: "I will raise them [not only the dead part of them] in the last day." Christ's and the apostles' doctrine will and must harmonize.

Again. From the desire which Paul expressed to depart and be with Christ, it is by some inferred that the soul lives in the body, and at death goes to Christ to live with him, and consequently the soul must be immortal. Now Paul said—If the dead rise not, then those who sleep in Jesus are perished, or lost; but if he could have been present with the Lord whilst dead, how could perishing be possible, in case there should be no resurrection? Paul did not expect his death to be a direct passage to Christ in glory, because he declared to the Colossians that when Christ their life should appear, then they also would appear with him in glory. Col. 3: 4. Paul looked for reward, but certainly not contrary to Christ's doctrine, promising the reward when he comes, "in the resurrection of the just." Luke 14: 14. Death is a reward, but it is the reward of disobedience. Life, by a resurrection from the dead, is a better reward, and this is the reward of faith in Christ.

From these remarks, I think any attentive student of the Bible can see that if we take man, person, and soul, for one and the same thing, and in death have the whole man dead until the resurrection, and the righteous now enter into eternal life, the wicked "destroyed" or "cut off" by "the second death," as their final reward, the Bible can be brought to harmonize. But let any one undertake to prove the immortality of the soul, which will force him to advocate immediate reward after death, and endless life in misery, and he will find that positive proof cannot be produced, and all his inferential proof can be upset by plain passages of Scripture.

Can we not see that, according to the plain teaching of the Bible, the whole man is mortal, and thus agree with Paul (1 Cor. 15: 54), that it is in the resurrection we lay off mortality and put on immortality?

Wellersburg, Pa. B. KNEPPER.

LONGING FOR HOME.

How dark and gloomy this world appears; the curse and its sad effects are seen everywhere we go. Death, mourning, anguish, temptation and disappointment, are on every hand. Our friends, our loved ones, are torn away from us by the cruel hand of death, and laid in the silent grave, there to sleep until the last trump of God shall awake them. We are strangers and pilgrims on the earth; we are away from our Eden home, living in an enemy's land, on the devil's battle-ground, and he contests every inch of land; he claims this earth as his. Thank God, the rightful owner is soon coming back, and will wrest the power from the old usurper. The devil promised to give the Savior all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them, if he would only fall down and worship him; while the fact was, he did not own a single inch of land. He has brought all his forces into the field, and has set them in battle array against the church of the living God. His forces are numerous and powerful. Will he conquer, or gain the victory? No, never. Thank the Lord, we fight under the blood-stained banner of the Prince of peace, under King Jesus, the Captain of our salvation. He never lost a battle, and never will.

How important it is that we have on the whole gospel armor, that we may wield successfully the sword that cuts, backed up by the fire that burns. O thou eternal Savior, come and destroy the devil, and all his workers. Come and put a perpetual end to the wickedness of the wicked. God of eternal love, rend the heavens and come down! Come and gather thy saints together unto thyself, that have made a covenant with thee by sacrifice. Our longing hearts cry out, O come, thou eternal love, come and bring salvation, immortality, and eternal life. Thou blessed Savior, come and complete the great plan of redemption. Thou holy, heavenly, blessed One, come and wake the sleeping dust; come and bring the last, lovely morning of the resurrection. Thou lovely Lamb of God, let the day of bright glory dawn. Come and bring eternal deliverance to thy saints. Eternal Bridegroom, come and take thy longing, weeping, waiting bride home to the marriage supper of the Lamb. "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly."

Sinner! prepare to meet thy God. "For the day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my redeemed is come, saith the Lord." Sinner! soon "the Lord Jesus will be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." Sinner! Christ is now your intercessor; very soon he will become your judge. Soon this earth will reel to and fro beneath the mighty blast of the judgment trump, and seal the final doom of an ungodly world. I beseech you to come to Christ. Make no delay. Mercy's door will soon be closed forever. Salvation is free, and boundless as the unmeasured love of God. Will you not come to Jesus and accept pardon and salvation? "The Spirit and the Bride say, Come; and let him that heareth say, Come; and let him that is athirst come; and whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Sinner! that means you. Life and death are set before you. Which will you have—eternal death, or eternal life?

"Here at thy cross, my dying Lord,
I lay my soul beneath thy love,
Beneath the droppings of thy blood,
Jesus, nor shall it e'er remove.
Should worlds conspire to drive me thence,
Moveless and firm this heart shall be,
Resolved (for that's my last defense)
If I must perish there to die."

West Chester, Ct. EDWARD G. EMMONS.

HINTS TO MINISTERS—TALKING TO LITTLE FOLKS.

Beloved in the gospel, do you talk to children, little prattlers, innocent, beautiful, lamb-like—take them in your arms, give them a rosy kiss? "Thank God for little children."

When you meet the lambs of the flock, in doors or out, do you study to gain their good will, their affections; labor to interest them in things lovely and of good report, things pertaining to the joys that await the blessed?

Smile upon a child—have you not won its heart? Does it not smile in return? Do not its eyes follow you? Does not its face sadden as you disappear, and smile when you come again? Does that smile cost you anything?

What parent will not love you if you show an interest in their child?

What church will not value the minister who thus wins the love and esteem of parent and child?

Will not "outsiders" come to see, and hear, and be converted under the minister who has first won the hearts of their children?

As a matter of fact and personal experience, did you ever know a preacher who paid no attention to the children to be very truly popular; or one that did, to be unpopular? He who never notices children may be respected, feared, obeyed; but is he truly loved?

"Ministers dear, guard these jewels,
As sacred offerings meet,
A wealth of household treasures
To lay at Jesus' feet."

LIBERAL OFFERS.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

We are anxious to have our paper reach several thousand new readers the coming year, and become a blessing to them. It is the best means we have of sowing the seed of the gospel of the kingdom in some hearts, and we should all awake, and do whatever we can to have its warnings of the coming judgment reach as many new readers as possible.

Some of our preachers have done nobly, and others would gladly help on the good cause, if they could receive aid for their families while they spend their time for the paper. For the benefit of such, the A. C. P. Society, at a recent meeting, by vote authorized the Agent to pay ten per cent to preachers on all collections for the Crisis and Young Pilgrim; and it is hoped they will take hold of the work in earnest, and have great success. Those who understand the expense of publishing a paper, know that it would cost no more to set up the type for twelve or fifteen thousand copies, than it does for a less number; hence, after our regular issue of about nine thousand copies is run off, we could print several thousand more at the cost only of press work and paper. It has, therefore, been concluded by the Editorial Committee and Business Agent, to whom the Society referred this subject, to make the following liberal offers to new subscribers, to induce them to form clubs, and thus make success easy to all who put forth efforts to obtain new subscribers.

TRIAL OFFER.

We will send the World's Crisis three months on trial, to new subscribers, for fifty cents. We ask our friends to obtain yearly subscriptions, if possible; but where subscribers can be obtained for only three months, please visit them again, and, if possible, get them to renew before their paper is stopped at the end of three months.

To aid in obtaining new subscribers for 1871, we make the following offer of nearly

Three Months Free.

We will send the Crisis—for the balance of this year, from the time the name is received—free to all new subscribers for 1871, sent in before Jan. 1st.—Rate $2.50.

Now is the time to subscribe, and put forth energetic efforts to obtain new subscribers.

CLUBBING WITH OTHER PAPERS.

As many persons take several papers, and could be induced to take the Crisis, if they could get two papers at club rates, we have accepted offers to club other papers with the Crisis, which will enable our friends to obtain subscribers where it would otherwise be impossible to introduce our paper.

If any of our regular subscribers wish ny of the papers on the list at club rates, ey can get new subscribers for the Crisis, it is not necessary that both papers ould be sent to the same address.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS THREE R SIX MONTHS FREE.

We will send the World's Crisis six onths, and the Phrenological Journal and Packard's Monthly (price $3.00) one year for $3.00; or the World's Crisis three months, with the Rural New Yorker (price $3.00) one year for $3.00; or, three months with the New York Weekly Tribune (price $2.00) one year for $2.00; or three months with the Bee-Keeper's Journal and National Agriculturist (price $1.00) one year for $1.00.

FAST TRAVELING.

This is truly a fast age in every sense. It is not only fast in travel, but in pride, selfishness, and general wickedness. The cry is, Take off the brakes, and put on the steam. Clear the track, and let us go through. Remove all obstructions, abolish all law; let us do as we please. Give us "liberty, equality, fraternity," and we will not complain. The spirit of the times is manifested in the demand for fast trains on the rail-roads. During the season, cars have been running the Pennsylvania and Fort Wayne route, from Chicago to New York, in twenty-seven hours; and next summer it is proposed to shorten the time to twenty-four hours. An atmospheric brake has been introduced on the road by means of which, when the cars are running forty-five miles an hour, the engineer can stop the train in going a distance equal to three times its length. The brakes are applied from the engine all at once, which puts the train under the complete control of the engineer.

"THE BROAD CHURCH."

Satan is doing his best at the present day to mix the world and christianity together, so as to neutralize the latter, and render it powerless in its efforts to reform people. Pure christianity leads all who enjoy it to come out from the world and be separate. Like the sun, it shines upon the world, but does not partake of its filth.

The following from the Liberal Christian, with comments from the Chicago Advance, is worthy of consideration:

"So we go on to observe that membership in the Christian Church is not so much for those who have the truth as for those who are seeking it, hungering for it, desiring to learn and obey it. If poor, buffeted men and women, broken in spirit, hopeless and unable to believe in anything above their own weakness and failures, ever come to us and say, "We should like to live in the atmosphere of strength and trust, of hope and good will which surrounds you; we are not sure about the being of God; it does not seem possible that Infinite Love and Justice rule the world, and the doctrine of immortality seems to us a fond imagination, yet should like to be with you because you seem friendly and true;" —if this ever occurs we shall open the doors wide, and welcome these applicants to all that the Church can give them. If there is one place better than another inside they shall have it. Our gladness would be far greater than we should feel at the reception of anybody who thinks he is a christian because he holds a sound, well-defined creed."

Imagine such a church, in which a part of the members have no faith in a hereafter, no belief in a divine providence or moral government, and no sure conviction of God's existence! What positive influence could it exert? What united action could it take? What common arrangements could be made for worship and instruction? What real fellowship of thought, feeling and work would be possible? How long could it subsist without radical divisions and warring parties? We certainly have sympathy for those who are in the perplexity and even anguish of doubt on the great question of religion. We believe in the duty and wisdom of treating them kindly, and of leading them into light by suitable instruction. Common sense and piety dictate such measures; but common sense and piety alike forbid receiving them into the church; for they are not yet in harmony with its organific principles. That the church may be able to instruct and comfort and guide others, it must be itself established in the truth, and must be so constituted as to be, in Paul's descriptive words, "the pillar and ground of the truth." But if these views of the Liberal Christian seem absurd, what shall be said of its farther position, that not even good morals should be made a condition of membership! It thus reasons:

"Again, our brother's last question is, "Why may not all of good morals be welcome? Where is the authority for making good morals a condition of church membership? And where in all the world is there a scintilla of support for the assumption that good morals is in fact made a condition of membership in any churches, Orthodox or Unitarian? In Unitarian churches, and in Orthodox churches, we know many people who do not possess this qualification of good morals, if there is any very elevated meaning in the words. Everybody knows that there are in all churches men who have in a large degree the spirit of the world. They are narrow, selfish, passionate, ill-tempered in their families, often oppressive and unjust. The world knows well that such men are in the Christian church everywhere, and no pretense of saintship on the part of the church can avail against the influence of the conduct and character of her members. The monastic idea is utterly wrong. No wall can be built high enough to insure sanctity inside of it. A Christian church is not to be a chartered guild or lodge composed of those who have attained to certain degrees of goodness. Let us not blind ourselves by fine words. A Christian church is an association of sinners who are trying to grow better. The people of whom we have spoken would be far worse than they are if they were not in the church."

THE SPIRIT OF SPIRITUALISM.

At the late National Convention of Spiritualists, held at Richmond, Ind., Sept. 20th, 21st, and 22nd, the following resolutions were adopted:—

"Resolved, That a committee be appointed to take into consideration the propriety of calling a World's Spiritual Convention, to meet at London, New York or Paris, at an early day."

"Resolved, That in accepting the solemn truths of history and analogy relative to all great and religious ideas, we fully believe and affirm that it is in the economy and progress of Spiritualism, to come up into organic life as a distinctive religious movement."

"Resolved. That the phenomena of Spiritualism present the doctrine of immortality as a matter of scientific demonstration."

"Resolved, That a new religion may be elaborated from the facts revealed through modern mediumship."

"Resolved, That the movement which has been partially put into execution for incorporating the words, 'God and Jesus Christ' in our National and State Constitutions, is entirely contrary to the genius of our institutions, and it is urged that all lovers of free institutions shall resist every attempt for its adoption."

"Resolved, That the compulsory reading of the Bible in our common schools is in direct opposition to the spirit of freedom, as it infringes upon the rights of a large number of the supporters of them, forcing upon the children a religious teaching which the parent disapproves."

From the foregoing, it will be seen that the Spiritualists contemplate "a distinctive religious movement," having "a new religion" that will not be in favor of requiring the Bible to be read in the public schools, nor of allowing "the words 'God and Jesus Christ' in our national and state constitutions." Such is the spirit of Spiritualism. It is wholly opposed to a pure christianity. It is the devil's counterfeit of all that is good.

DID HE THINK?

When reading the following account of a suicide committed by a dog, the inquiry arose in our minds, did he reason? Is not thought as wonderful in a dog as in a man? If it be assumed that a man has an immortal soul because he thinks, then has not the dog one too, for the same reason? If matter can be organized in a dog so as to think, love, hate, and remember, why may it not perform the same functions in a man? If matter can be so arranged as to feel pain, it may be made to see, hear, taste, smell, and think. There is no room to doubt but the brain, in all animals, including man, is the organ that does the thinking, and is the great centre of all sensation. Hence thought can exist in connection with man no longer than the brain exists. When that is dead, man stops thinking. Says David, when speaking of man, "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Ps. 146: 4.

We now present the account of the suicide committed by the dog, as given in the Pall Mall Gazette:

"I was walking on the banks of the Loire when I perceived a dog, something of a setter, trotting up and down by the water's edge. He went and came with uneven steps, sometimes hastening his movements, sometimes stopping short as if he was pondering some weighty matter. His proceedings roused my curiosity, and, concealing myself behind some young trees, I determined to watch him. The dog, who was old, thin and, to a certain extent, deprived of the use of his hind legs, went on in the same manner for more than a quarter of an hour; then approaching the edge of the river bank at a steep place, he sat down and looked sadly at the water. Presently, having finally resolved on his course, he raised himself on his poor paralyzed paws, made a spring, and threw himself into the Loire. I ran to the place whence he fell, and saw him carried off by the stream, without making the slightest resistance. As he came near the bank I called him gently, and held out my cane that he might take hold of it. He made no sign. I tied my handkerchief to the end of my cane and threw it to him; he turned his head away sadly and drifted off. I lost sight of him at the end of a few minutes. He must, no doubt, have sunk.

Feeling persuaded that this unfortunate dog had actually chosen death by a deliberate act of his will, I mentioned the circumstance to several persons, and inquiries were made which elicited the fact that the poor animal had belonged to a gardener, who, seeing him infirm and useless, had pitilessly driven him from his home. He had wandered for a whole month in the fields and about the farms, receiving more blows than crusts, till he preferred a violent death to his miserable existence."

CHURCH DINNERS AND SUPPERS.

How clearly certain scriptures seem to be fulfilling at the present day. Just before the second coming of Christ, we learn that some of his professed followers will say in their hearts, our "Lord delayeth his coming," and will smite their "fellow servants, and . . . eat and drink with the drunken." Those found in that situation will be unprepared for the coming of Christ, and have their "portion with the hypocrites." They are the foolish virgins, who had "no oil with them." They are destitute of the Holy Spirit, because they are living like the world, and are filled with its spirit. They love pleasure scenes, and are truly conformed to the world. The love of the Father is not in them; if it were, they would not live as they are now doing. With greediness they are drinking down the spirit and manners of the world, and flattering themselves that all is well. Ministers and their followers are drifting to perdition as carelessly as were the antediluvians the week before the commencement of the flood. The word of the Lord is neglected, and fables are accepted; worldly-mindedness takes the place of godliness, and finally their wages will be destruction instead of salvation.

The following is a sample of the way the fashionable churches are managed in Chicago. These notices were in the Chicago Tribune, Nov. 3d, and appeared just as they are found here:—

"CHURCH DINNERS AND SUPPERS.

The ladies of the Union Park Congregational church have once more entered the field, with their ever popular dinners, at Metropolitan Hall, and their tables are crowded every day. It was the Union Park ladies, by the way, who first originated these agreeable banquets, and it is safe to say that their way of getting up and setting out a table has never been excelled. The most substantial proof of their excellence is to be found in the multitude of dinners who, once enjoying the solid comforts of the entertainment, become regular attendants. Several years of experience have taught the young ladies of the congregation the duties and the pleasures of waiting to perfection, and so we have a double treat. It would be invidious to institute comparisons, but there is a table in that hall where a cup of the best coffee in the city can be had. Let the visitor make the round during the week, and he will find it out. It is advisable to be on hand early.

The dinners given by the ladies of the Ninth Presbyterian church, in Farwell Hall, are still drawing a large attendance daily. Yesterday the hall was filled during the dinner hours, and all seemed to be thoroughly satisfied with the fare set before them.

The young people of the Seventh Presbyterian church will give an oyster supper, at the church parlors, corner of Peoria and Jackson streets, this evening. Good music will be in attendance. A cordial invitation is extended to all. Admission free; supper extra."

THE STATE OF EUROPE.

The surrender of Metz by Marshal Bazaine has been severely censured by the French republican party. It is evident he is acting in harmony with the wishes of Napoleon, instead of the republic. The situation at Paris is daily becoming more critical. The Prussians seem resolved not to cease hostilities till France is thoroughly humbled and subdued.

The Italians are allowing the Pope to exercise his ecclesiastical rights undisturbed, and give him the same privileges as any other distinguished minister would be allowed to enjoy.

Russia is evidently preparing for some important movement, as soon as the circumstances will permit. The "eastern question" is again coming up for consideration. Turkey stands in danger from the Russian power.

EXPLANATION ONCE MORE.

As many do not yet understand the date on their papers, or wrappers, we would say, the date on the paper is the time to which you have paid. If it is 7 Sept. 70, it means that you have paid to last Sept. If Nov. or Dec. 70, it shows that you have paid so much in advance; but if it is 67, 68 or 69, it shows that you are in arrears from that date, and ought to pay up immediately.

TRACTS TO SCATTER IN WIS.

Wishing to scatter my four new tracts more extensively in Wisconsin than I have been able to do with my own hand, with the help of a few friends, I offer to send by mail to any brother or sister living in Wisconsin, as many as 10 cents will prepay, if they will send me the postage, provided they send any time before the close of November, giving plain directions where to send them. I limit the offer to Wisconsin for the present, and restrict as to the quantity allowed each individual, fearing they may be too soon exhausted. Let no one send over 10 cts. in postage unless they design it as a donation to aid the enterprise. Direct to William Sheldon, Brodhead, Green Co., Wis., and send within the time specified.

THE BRODHEAD DISCUSSION.

This discussion was a pleasant affair, being conducted with much candor by Elder Grant and Rev. J. C. Crawford, of the Universalist order, on the destiny of rebellious man. The community listened with remarkable candor to the arguments pro and con. The attendance was good, and we hope good results will yet grow out of this effort to contrast truth with error. A committee on resolutions was called for, and on motion was appointed by the chair, who, after deliberation, presented the following for the consideration of the large congregation, at the close of the debate:—

Resolved, That we desire publicly to express our admiration of the masterly manner in which the speakers, Rev. Miles Grant and Rev. J. C. Crawford, have presented their respective views of Scripture teaching, and of the frankness, candor and christian spirit in which they have argued the same.

Resolved, That our sincere thanks be tendered to I. F. Mack, Esq., for the patient, able, and impartial manner in which he has discharged the duties of presiding officer during this discussion.

BURR SPRAGUE,
H. F. MOORE, } Com.
R. MORRIS,

Unanimously agreed.

These resolutions were unanimously sanctioned by a vote of the congregation, and ordered printed in our village paper, and in the Crisis. The discussion closed up in a quiet and orderly manner.

POPULAR RELIGION.

Much of the religion of the day relishes and sanctions much that is opposed to the simplicity of the gospel of Christ. The great aim appears to be to please self, and please society, and not to please God. We are glad to find some who are willing to stem the popular tide. A secular paper thus speaks of a small class:—

"Free Methodists are opposed to balls, lotteries, oyster suppers, fashionable parties, etc., gotten up to obtain money for religious purposes. The appeal should be to man's moral sense and not to his love of carnal pleasure. Free Methodists are opposed to the erection of extravagantly costly and ornamented churches, with sold and rented pews for the accommodation of the rich, to the inevitable exclusion of the poor, to whom the gospel is specially sent. Free Methodists are opposed to costly and ornamental dress, furniture and equipage, as being opposed to the plainness and simplicity required by the Christian religion. Free Methodists are opposed to worshiping God by proxy, as is attempted to be done in churches that give their singing into the hands of a few trained performers. Free Methodists are opposed to the substitution of reading for preaching, and its usual accompaniment of standing for sitting in time of prayer."

Would others but catch this spirit of aversion to popular religion, it would be pleasing to God. How God is dishonored by this assimilation of the church to the world. The fear of God has become a subordinate consideration. Men must gratify their relish for pleasure and honor, even if they have to remodel the entire Christian system, and make God's house a house of merchandise, even worse than that which Jesus found in the temple, when he used the scourge of cords, and drove them out.

TRUTH AND RIGHTEOUSNESS.

In our zeal for the truth, we should never forget the possibility of "holding the truth in unrighteousness." It is well to be acquainted with the theology of Heaven, and to give it special preference over the theories of men, for God has placed it in the Bible to be respected by us, and we should not undervalue it in the least; but theory, alone, no matter how good it may be, is not enough to save us. We must wear "the breastplate of righteousness."

As ministers of Christ, we must make experimental religion more prominent, as the basis of practical religion—a religion that renovates the heart, and implants sweet peace and heavenly joy in the soul, and opens communion with the throne of Heaven. This sliding along with a righteousness that consists simply in practical religion, independent of experimental religion, will never carry us to the home of the saints. The Divine Spirit may "dwell" in us, making us heavenly minded; then, with this experimental element, it will be easy to live out practical religion. Strike the true vein of righteousness, and the sweet waters of holiness will spring up and overflow.

While we should not even slightly underestimate the distinguishing and characteristic features of our faith in a theological point of view, nor throw them into obscurity in the least degree, we must make experimental righteousness more prominent than ever before. Information is good, but renovation is better,—the "renewing of your minds," or "the renewing of the Holy Ghost." With hearts thus inspired by holy zeal, we shall be better prepared to lead perishing men to the fold of Christ, and shall be more successful in reaching the hearts of sinners.

A cold heart is not apt to impart warmth to the hearts of others; and we shall not be apt to infuse interest into others of which we are ourselves destitute. Let us have hearts that feel for men, and by Divine help let us infuse that feeling into other hearts, and the work of God will prosper in our hands. How can we water others, while we lack the grace of righteousness arising from true experimental religion? "Let us have grace whereby we may serve God acceptably, with reverence and godly fear"; then proclaim God's truth from righteous hearts. Ever let truth and righteousness go hand in hand.

RELIGION IN ENGLAND.

A secular paper gives the following picture of

THE CLERGY IN ENGLAND.

England is in advance of us. She has established several "ministerial intelligence offices." To these offices any vacant parish may apply for a servant (of the church), and any distressed clergyman for a situation. The price of the market is not high at the time of our writing, if we may judge from the quotations in Chambers' Journal. Two hundred clergymen are reported as "out of employment." One man—who, with unconscious self-satire, has described his "views" as moderate—ventures to demand £180 a year. Only seven aspire to £150. A single divine underbids these £10. Thirty-five ask for £120, and the other 150 or so of reverend gentlemen are actually going—or wanting to go—for £100 a year or less; several asking less than a good butler's wages, and one offering himself for "10s. 6d. a service and his traveling expenses." The whole 200 could be procured for less than half the price paid for a bishop.

Episcopal clergymen in England cannot relinquish their profession, whatever their change of views or circumstances. Not that they are obliged to officiate as ministers, but they are unable to throw off the clerical character and enter another profession or engage in trade. This has been felt to be a hardship, and for many years attempts have been made to alter the law, but without success. It is expected, however, that this year the efforts will be successful, as the bishops have withdrawn their opposition to the measure. They, however, propose an alteration in the bill, which will prevent any one who has relinquished the clerical office in the Episcopal church from ever re-entering it. The rule has been, "Once in, you cannot get out." According to them it will be in future, "Once out, you must not return." Of course the present law and the proposed alteration have reference only to ministers of the Establishment. Dissenting ministers of all denominations are regarded in law simply as laymen, hence the law does not interfere with their assuming or relinquishing the position of a minister of the gospel in their respective denominations.

Every experiment in the past proves that the various efforts to legalize and popularize religion is detrimental to the spirituality of the church. Let the ministers of Christ go forth with a commission from heaven, in the spirit of the Master, and "ministerial intelligence offices" would not be needed.

For the World's Crisis.

SOFTLY, PLEASE, BRO. MUNGER.

BRO. MUNGER:—In your "Notes by the Way," published in the Crisis of Oct. 19th, you speak of the seventh-day Adventists as being a very bad people. No doubt you have had some pretty sad experience with them, or you would not speak of them as you do. But do we not find some bad people in all denominations, first-day Adventists not excepted? From what I have seen of the seventh-day folks, and from the tone of the paper they publish, I should judge that they were far from being as bad as you seem to think they are. I certainly hope so. But however bad they may be, it seems to me it would be better not to call them by such hard names. It only chafes and irritates the bad, while the good feel grieved and hurt.

I believe the more kind and gentle we are towards those whom we believe to be in error, the more likely we shall be to win them over to the truth. And even those whom we know to be real hypocrites, can be much more easily reached by loving words and winning ways, than by harshness and severity.

I have some warm christian friends among this people, who sometimes read our papers; but I really should not like to have them see those words of yours, they seem so harsh. I hope you will not feel hurt at what I have written, for I certainly have no unkind feelings towards you, but I do desire to see that course pursued which will be most likely to produce love and harmony among all God's children, whatever be their name or views.

Affectionately your Bro. in Christ,

St. John's, Mich. EDWIN A. BOYNTON.

CIRCULATE THEM NOW.

"CHURCH SPECTACLES" gives authentic advertisements of church levees, fairs, gambling, etc.; also scriptural rebukes, christian expostulation, advice, reproof and warning, from some of the best workers, writers and editors, in various churches. Now is the time to scatter them, while church players and gamblers are about to engage in drawing in the unwary for church frolics. The price is low, and many thousands can be scattered, and some honest ones shown the better way. One brother has ordered five hundred copies, another four hundred, and several one hundred each. $2 per hundred by mail. Those who wish sample copies may send ten cents and get three copies by mail. We have printed a large quantity for the Lord's work.

FROM DR. W. K. EVERSON, Chicago, Ill.: "Bro. Wellcome:—"Church Spectacles" are certainly well calculated to enable church members to see the enormity of their practices, and their fatal effects upon vital religion. Working brethren will not fail of a harvest if they will distribute this tract freely among church members. 'The Inquirer' is also an invaluable document, and cannot fail to arouse a spirit of investigation wherever it is introduced. If this little work could be placed in the hands of every thinking man, it would awaken an interest in the subject of which it treats that would shake the Protestant churches to their centres, as it ought. Send me one hundred copies of each by express."

"WITH WHAT BODY"?

"But some man will say, How are the dead raised up? And with what body do they come?"—1 Cor. 15: 35.

Some even in the present day are so blind to the plain doctrines of the Bible, as to ask this question; and even those who profess to be teachers in Israel, I have heard ask this question, saying, If it be true that the dead "know not anything," then it would indeed be a new creation instead of a resurrection. But what says Paul on this way of reasoning? He says, "Thou fool! that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die."—1 Cor. 15: 36. And he says still further, all flesh is not alike; there is one "flesh of men, another of fishes, and another of birds." Also different kinds of bodies; "bodies celestial" and "bodies terrestrial." Different are all bodies in glory; "one glory of the sun," another "of the moon," etc.; one star differing from another star in glory.

Paul says, "So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption. . . It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. . . . And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. . . . For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality."—1 Cor. 15: 42–53.

We see by Paul's words that the body is raised up incorruptible, immortal, a spiritual body. For, says Job, "I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness." "Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is."—1 John 3: 2.

And what was Christ like after he arose from the dead? Did he not come and go like the wind? While Mary was on her way from his tomb, going to tell his followers the glad news of his resurrection, did he not suddenly stand before her? And when his brethren were gathered together at meat, did he not then suddenly appear before them all? Is not this as he told Nicodemus in John 3: 8? "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, or whither it goeth. So is every one that is born of the Spirit."

Brethren, with such a body as this shall the dead come forth, and we shall be changed and made like them. Glorious hope! Let us hold out faithful unto the end, for such shall be saved. Yours in hope,

Canton, Pa. H. J. BENEDICT.

For the World's Crisis.

SHORT REPORT.

Since my last letter to the Crisis, which was in August, have not had regular appointments, but thought best to hold protracted or conference meetings in new or destitute places, as the way opened. By request, held a grove meeting the first of September in Perkins' Plantation. A few in that place had found new light, and wanted others to enjoy the same blessing. A grove was fitted up for a place of worship. Brethren and sisters came to help, and the people in the vicinity came to hear for themselves. Although an effort had been made by some to nip the meeting in the bud, as they said, by the use of an outside, opposing influence, still the more were led to search for themselves; and instead of driving people away from the truth, their effort against the truth was the means of more investigation, and the imparting of new light to some.

A Baptist minister came out, he said, to hear for himself (although advised by others not to come). Said he had heard much about the Adventists, but wanted to know for himself. After hearing on the literal fulfillment of prophecy, said he believed the same Jesus that went into the tomb went into heaven, and the same one would come again; and he also believed in the literal resurrection of the dead, and in the earth being the kingdom promised to the saints. He is now investigating the immortality question. May he be led into all truth.

Several wanderers returned and found peace in Jesus. Bro. Haggett came to our help Sunday. Our meeting had a good effect on the community, I am informed. To God be all the glory.

My next appointment was at Belgrade, Baptist house (if they would let me in), to preach on Spiritualism; as that delusion was getting hold of many minds. They had suffered a trance speaker in their house. The day came. I was there, but no admittance to preach, although I had preached in the house one-fourth of the time for one year, and held a protracted meeting with the Baptist minister, and some were hopefully converted. But somehow they would not make first-class Baptists, I thanked God for that effort. Some who had been lingering around the Baptists had their eyes opened, and I hope it will do them good.

I had the privilege of listening to a discourse from one whom Paul would have called a "novice." His effort was, to make us believe that one was three and three one, as he termed it; a triune God; and such a trying time as he had; it was indeed trying to many who heard it. He said God was never represented in Scripture as a person. What blindness! No wonder people are in darkness, when led by such blind guides. The same man asked the question in a meeting, after I had spoken, "Is there one in the house that ever lived a day in all his life without committing sin? Is there one dare say so?"

I felt it duty I owed to my Master to say, Yes. The blood of the blessed Jesus cleanseth from all sin. To his name be all the glory.

Our next grove meeting was in Chesterville, Borough school-house. Had a good prayer-meeting Thursday evening. Brn. Robert Hall, Nason, Rhodes, and others, were present, to help preach the word. The people in the place refused to hear; but the few who came out were blest. The minister warned his flock to keep away. On Sunday we went into the grove, which had been seated for the occasion by Brn. Bean, Ireland, and others. Many came to hear the word. Brn. Nason and Hall gave meat in due season. Our meeting was one of the best. Many resolved to live near to God and for his glory, as they believed time to be short. Bro. Rhodes concluded to stop and hold meetings evenings a week longer. The interest seemed to demand it. The professed good people locked the house against him, but one of the Baptist brethren procured a key and let them in. Saturday they held a Free Baptist conference at the house, and concluded to lock the house and make things sure. I went with other brethren, and found many waiting to go in; but no admittance. I asked one of the leading ones of the church why it was done. He said they would not let the Adventists into the house; that I had not used the minister well; that I called there two or three years ago, and at a prayer meeting gave an exhortation, asked sinner to arise for prayer, when two arose. (One of them found mercy, and is living for God today.) To all which I pleaded guilty, if it was a crime.

We went into the shed, sang, exhorted, and praised God. One young lady confessed Jesus. Some saw the light as never before. Went several miles to our meeting Sunday.

Amid all the opposition have more calls than I can attend. Thank God, I am out here from choice. I believe Jesus is soon coming. To him be all the glory.

For the World's Crisis.

"GIRD UP THE LOINS OF YOUR MIND."

As Christ must be formed within us, or we be begotten by him, the second Adam, in order to have a well grounded hope for the future; and as the only food for this new man must come through the medium of the thoughts, hence this exhortation of Peter, which agrees with that of Paul in his epistle to the Philipians, when he said, "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

So inclined are we to live by sight rather than faith, to think and talk about our visible surroundings rather than the invisible things revealed,—which are facts just as real as those seen,—we shall do well to heed this exhortation. If we would have spiritual health and strength, we must do so. The arch enemy is subtle, and his many devices to draw people's minds away from divine truths often remind me of the partridge, though they differ widely in motive. The latter, from care and affection, seeks to protect. The former, from envy and spite, to destroy. The partridge, when rearing her little brood, if man or dog approaches, will flutter around, sometimes appearing to be lame, then run just fast enough to keep out of their reach; thus trying to attract their attention away from her helpless young, that they may hide, and so escape danger.

So with our arch deceiver. He is pretty sure to keep up something before the mind to attract it, or keep it from feeding on spiritual food. No matter what—politics, slander, gossip, anything, everything, but the faith that works by love and purifies the heart.

We often find the Psalmist rehearsing what God had done for his people. It kept faith bright, and love strong, so that he felt like saying, "The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether; more to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold; sweeter also than honey and the honeycomb." He loved to think and talk about those things. It was real food for him to trace the "guiding hand." But it takes an effort to overcome the world, the flesh, and the devil. We must not lay down our oars; if we do, we shall be sure to float with the current. O, my Lord, help thy people to keep the fountain and stream pure a little longer.

TYPOGRAPHICAL ERRORS.—People who are in the habit of criticising typographical errors in the newspapers, should remember that every column contains from five to twenty thousand distinct pieces of metal, according to the size of the paper, and the type. The displacement of a single one makes an error. Is it any wonder that errors occur?

PROGRESS.

This is truly an age of progression. In this day every department of science and labor, both physical and mental, is developing most wonderful results. Great discoveries have been made, and many more are constantly being brought to light; wonderful and useful inventions are incessantly springing from the mind of man, as his necessities increase.

Never since the days of Adam has there been such a period, when everything seems to have reached its height, ready for Christ's coming. Man's inquiring mind, and cunning hand, have pried into the vast chambers of the earth, uncovering for our gaze and benefit a great wealth of minerals, which seem inexhaustible, though being constantly drawn upon and taken by modern appliances. In the firmament above new planets have been discovered, the burning of others has been watched with emotions of admiration and awe, and the workings of our own globe are made known to us. Many and beautiful are the treasures of the sea, which are ever from such depths brought forth.

But with all this wonderful and amazing advancement, has much benefit been derived for the benefit of Christ's kingdom? No doubt through the agency of the press, and other efficient and improved methods, many heathen have been reached with the glad tidings of salvation.

There are many useful institutions doing a noble work for the reformation of fallen manhood in our great cities, all of which God will abundantly bless. But we cannot be blind to the fact that there is more than a corresponding progression in sin. The devil and his many emissaries are doing every thing in their power to counteract and destroy all efforts for good that are being put forth by God's laborers. Bethels, asylums, homes for the friendless, mission chapels, and the many other modes for spreading the "good news," have to struggle against the influence of theatres, gambling houses, concerts, fairs, and various other avenues to the downward road. There is more iniquity extant now, and surer means for screening guilt from the eye of man, than ever before. Truly the harvest is ripe. Man has been created by God "to devise cunning works," but when he forgets that the fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge, his wisdom being of this world is foolishness with God. The words of the Almighty as spoken by the prophet Jeremiah are peculiarly applicable to those of these latter days,—they are wise to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge.

Let us strive, then, dear christians, for true wisdom; that it may not be asked of us—"How long, ye simple ones, will ye love simplicity, and the scorners delight in their scorning, and fools hate knowledge?" Our heavenly Father, help us to love Christ supremely, being wise unto salvation, for we know it is life eternal "to know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."

Wilmington, Del. CYRUS MENDENHALL.

THE RELIGION OF LABOR.

Religion does not altogether consist of devotional exercises, but, as well, of daily work. We get a wrong idea of Christianity when we reduce it all to songs and sermons, to prayers, solemn faces, and ecclesiastical paraphernalia.

It is not especially for Sabbaths and sanctuaries, but also for week-days, for shops, for homes, for mills, for stores, for streets and fields. Religion is largely an out-door institution. Its Author was born, baptized, transfigured, and crucified under no roof but the sky. It means diligence in business, serving the Lord in common vocations and every-day relations, as well as in consecrated syllables on set occasions. Jesus was more sublimely great standing unknown at the carpenter's bench in Nazareth, with apron on, than if he had been surpliced as a priest in the temple, or arrayed in robes of loyalty on Pilate's throne. He was greater with an adze in his hand than a crown on his head.

Christianity allows no aversion toward the mechanic. It gives him honorable position. It invites him to its home, and visits him in his. Yet how many rich young ladies who would scorn to associate with the sons and daughters of our working-men! The matrimonial problems that busy their brains involve such fractions as lawyers, physicians, large-salaried preachers, wholesale merchants, millionaires, and gentlemen of leisure. It would be ridiculous, they think, to throw themselves away on mechanics! Of course, society has its affinities and that is well. Education grants it. Refinement and culture always seek their level. But we dig down for gold. Too often, dissipated dandyism is petted and honored, while intelligent industry is denied a place. The difference between building houses and selling houses is not so great that one should be considered contemptible and the other illustrious. Really, as a business, it makes but little difference whether a man mends clothes, bones, pens, houses, laws, or morals. Work is work and nothing less; man is man and nothing more.—Clark's Work-day Christianity.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. J. BICKFORD writes:—"The Lord deigns to meet with us at Great Falls, and by his help we are enabled to grow strong in the God of our salvation. There is a good disposition on the part of old and young to secure eternal riches by the way of the cross, and help on the blessed work of Christ our coming King; to upbuild in love and union. We are striving daily to pattern after our leader, the Chief Shepherd, that when he shall appear we may receive a crown that fadeth not away. We can but feel thankful that God hath shown us the weakness of this mortal life, and how frail and inefficient man is without the aid of some higher power; and how the Father of mercies has bestowed that power and efficiency upon his dear Son, to give grace and strength in our weakness; yea, moreover, to deliver us from this body of corruption, that mortality might be swallowed up of life. For we are sown in corruption; we shall (if we die) be raised in incorruption; and the living shall be changed. O what a blessed hope is ours. Well might the apostle thank God for the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. This victory comes not at death, for death holds our dear ones until the trump awakes them at the coming of the mighty One, who shall conquer death and the grave; then victory comes at the resurrection.

You who are scattered and divided, look at this glorious victory soon to be achieved. Behold He comes, the mighty One; his reward is with him, and it should be our inquiry daily, Will he reward me?"

BRO. O. W. KIMBALL writes:—"I left home Oct. 26th, to attend my appointment Sabbath, 30th, at the Bethel, Concord, N. H. Took the cars at Canton, Me., and had a good chance to introduce Jesus to one young man, whom I overheard say he had left home to go West without friends to help him. How I love to recommend Jesus as a friend, for I know he will take good care of all who trust him. At Portland saw Bro. Humphrey, and learned that the Lord was at work there. Sinners had been converted, and the work goes on. Praise the Lord. In Concord, found a good home near the Bethel. Friday afternoon few came out. Had a good time in the Lord. In the evening a union prayer-meeting. Brethren from the Centre street church came out. Where there is union, there is strength.

Sabbath, 30th, a goodly number came out to hear the word of life. We felt to say as we stood before them, Who is sufficient for these things? But instead of finding them there to criticize, they came to help in the work of the Lord. The power of God was there. Sinners trembled. One backslider came back to Father's house. Here is a people that love the Lord and are trying to stand the storm of the last days. They are bound for the kingdom. May God help them."

BRO. GEO. THOMSON writes:—"I am still able to go about preaching the precious word. I have lately visited some of the little flock in Columbia and Sauk counties, and endeavored to break to them the bread of life. The hearts of the saints were made glad, and some new ones started for the heavenly kingdom. What a privilege it is in these last days to be giving meat in due season; and how faithful we ought to be in this respect, not dealing in abstract theories and musty theologies, but proclaiming the coming of Christ near at hand, and urging a preparation for that event. I think that your late discussion in Brodhead will be productive of much good. Thinking men will appreciate the force of your opponent's admission, namely, that you 'threw Scripture on him by the bushel.' Pray for me."

BRO. J. G. HOOK writes:—"Our meetings are increasing in interest daily. We had a great day yesterday, Nov. 6th. Many have found Jesus precious and mighty to save. Fifteen have been buried with Christ in Delaware river, and are rejoicing in the Lord. Others are waiting an opportunity. Last evening we ate the Lord's Supper with many dear saints, whom we expect to meet again in the kingdom of God, when Jesus will be with us in person. Many are under deep conviction for sin, and many more are convicted that we preach 'the gospel.' Brotherly love and christian union characterize our meetings. The interest manifested by the people is such, we have decided to remain another week. Brethren, pray for us and the work in Philadelphia."

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

LONDON, Nov. 10. The Tribune correspondent, writing from Paris on the 5th, says: The cry for peace is universal. The soldiers, although Trochu is popular, have neither faith nor confidence in his generalship. The mobiles and peasants recently from their villages wish to go home, and openly tell the Prussians that they have no intention of remaining out in the cold long on salt beef whilst the heroic citizens are sleeping quietly in their houses or in barracks. The workingmen are spoiling for a fight in the streets, with the Prussians or any one else. They are, however, so thoroughly enjoying themselves, doing nothing and getting paid for it, that they are in too good a temper to be mischievous.

To-day's war despatches chronicle important French successes before Paris through the capture of several Prussian camps. Garibaldi has been again victorious, having routed a force of 5000 strong. The latest intelligence from the army of the Loire states that there have been three days' continuous fighting without decisive results. The losses of the French are frightful, but the enemy have been driven back ten miles. Advices have just been received of a series of engagements near Orleans, in all of which the French were successful. The French were pressing forward toward the city, and as their movements tended to surround the enemy the latter were obliged to evacuate the city. The Prussians lost considerably in killed, wounded and prisoners. There is great difficulty in obtaining provisions, owing to the constant drain made by the repeated requisitions of the enemy on the people. The surrounding country is entirely ruined.

LONDON, Nov. 11. The report received last night that the garrison at New Breisach had hoisted the white flag is confirmed to-day by an official despatch, announcing the capitulation of the fortress yesterday afternoon. Five thousand prisoners, including 100 officers, fell into the hands of the Germans. No guns were captured

New Breisach is a village of 2000 inhabitants, in the Department of Haut Rhine, on the left bank of the Rhine, and was fortified by Vaubon.

The Prussian government has sent a sharp diplomatic note to Austria, stating that as she armed herself at the beginning of the present war between France and Prussia, she has no right to offer mediation.

BERLIN, Nov. 11. It is rumored that Bavaria remains outside of North German Confederation on account of being refused participation in direction of military and foreign affairs.

Deserters from Paris who have been taken to Versailles state that Gen. Trochu is forming for a grand sortie beyond the walls of Paris to restore the prestige of the French arms. The Prussians are constructing fresh batteries upon the heights of Rainey opposite Noissy at Montmagny opposite St. Denis, and also at Bazans and Courbevou.

BERLIN, Nov. 11. The army of Frederick Charles is steadily advancing South.

The discussion of the new Constitution at Versailles proceeds favorably, and the general impression is that the Bavarian difficulty will be surmounted.

FLORENCE, Nov. 11. The Pope has fixed his compensation for improvements, made by him in Rome, at five millions.

LONDON, Nov. 12. The Times publishes an important correspondence from St. Petersburg, which states that Prince Gortschakoff, the Russian premier, has addressed, on behalf of the Czar, a circular to the Great powers who were parties to the treaties of 1856 excluding Russian war vessels from the black sea, suggesting some modifications of the provisions in the interest of Russia.

TOURS, Nov. 13. Despatches to the government here from General de Palladines, estimate that the losses which the Germans suffered, by their defeat at Orleans aggregated ten thousand men, killed, wounded and taken prisoners. The results of the victory are very important.

☞ According to German authority, the first daily newspaper in the world was the Frankfort Journal, which was founded by Wenolt Emmel in 1615.

A COSTLY PALACE.—The expense of building Wilhelmshohe, or "William's Height," the residence assigned to Louis Napoleon by the king of Prussia, was enormous. It is said that it required the labor of two thousand men fourteen years, and that the accounts were burned to destroy all traces of the extravagance. This palatial chateau and pleasure park was built by Frederick II., Elector of Hesse, out of money received by him from George III., of England, for the 17,000 Hessians hired by King George, as Elector of Hanover. All the surroundings of the place are in the most luxurious style. Nothing is wanting. There are hot-houses on an amazing plan; temples of Apollo and Mercury; waterfalls, pheasantries, lakes, and a Chinese village. There is, perhaps, the greatest fountain in the world, its column of water rising to the height of one hundred feet, and being twelve inches in thickness. At the highest point of the grounds, nearly 1400 feet above the Fulda, there is a strange building of octagonal shape, with a series of cascades descending from its foot, through five basins, to a "Grotto of Neptune." The building at the top of the cascade is named the Riesenschloss, from a colossal statute of Hercules.

A NEW WAR IN PROSPECT.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14. The news from Europe this forenoon is such as to leave but little hope of peace for some time, as it sets forth that Russia, tired of her long inactivity, is about to stretch forth her avaricious hand for the conquest of Turkey. A special dispatch says that Russia claims a violation of the Treaty of 1856 by Turkey, because of the consolidation of the Roumanian Provinces, and because the Turkish Government permitted its war vessels to enter the Black Sea. The dispatch intimates that Russia's designs are also directed towards Austria and that German interference is guarded against by a secret treaty between Prussia and Russia, by which the former binds itself not to interfere in the Turkish affair in consideration of Russia's holding aloof from the Franco-Prussian complication.

☞ Dr. S. P. Tregelles, the famous Biblical scholar of Germany, was prostrated by a second stroke of paralysis while revising the last chapters of his Greek Testament. He is unable to complete it at present, but the work, with the exception of Revelations, will be issued immediately. It is pronounced the most reliable text of the Greek Testament in existence.

In Brief.

☞ There are said to be no fewer than twenty thousand women at work in the fields out in Wisconsin.

☞ An old farmer said of a minister whose sermons were much wanting in point: "Ah, yes; he's a good man, I dare say, but he will rake with the teeth upward."

☞ The Royal Crown of Great Britain, worn by Queen Victoria at State ceremonies, contains 1363 brilliant diamonds, 1273 rose diamonds, and 147 table diamonds, one large ruby, sapphires, 11 emeralds, 4 small rubies and 227 pearls, making altogether 3043 precious stones.

☞ It is said that a nutmeg tree has been found in the Sierra Nevada range of California, producing nutmegs equal to those of the East Indies.

☞ Fresh beef is now brought from California, to New York, in "refrigerator" cars.

☞ Among the letters found in the Tuilleries, is one written to the Emperor by the Empress while she was in Egypt. She warns him against proceeding with some new scheme of ambition, and concludes with these words: "Believe me you cannot make successfully two coups d' etat in one life."

☞ The orthodox Buddhists cling to the ancient system of palm-leaf books. The process adopted is to cut the words in by means of an iron style—an operation highly injurious to the eyesight. The present king of Burmah has lately attempted to discourage the practice, by substituting therefor the modern printing press. Three hundred copies of a Brahman Grammar have been struck off under his supervision. The conservative pundits are in dismay.

☞ A Woman's Missionary Society has been formed in India, whose headquarters are at Calcutta, the principal object of which is to reach and save the zenana women, the women of high caste, wives and daughters of wealthy merchants, who are closely confined in chambers, which they leave only on extraordinary occasions, and who number about fifteen millions.

☞ The stone being used in the erection of a new court house in Dearborn county, Ind., is without seams, and on being struck with a hammer will ring like a bell.

☞ A new vessel is to be built in East Boston to take the place of the Missionary brig Morning Star wrecked in the Pacific Ocean.

☞ The Italian military authorities have closed the Jesuits College at Rome. Gen. Lamormora has occupied the palace of Quirinal, as state property. Italy is ready, urging her army and arranging facilities for collection of reserves more quickly than under the present operations.

☞ Thanksgiving will be on the 24th.

☞ Dr. Stevens, Baptist Missionary at Rangoon, says that since the opening of telegraphic communication Burmah is only two days from Europe.

☞ Two Protestant Spanish monthlies are issued—one in Valparaiso, and one in Santiago. The Bible Society of the former city sustains two colporteurs and a depository. There are now in Chili, ten Protestant ministers and fourteen congregations—five fold increase in the first case, and seven-fold in the latter, since 1856.

☞ Sixteen young gentlemen graduated at the medical school at Dartmouth college, last week. One of the above named graduates, Mr. Parm, is a native African and was educated partly at the expense of the American colonization society. He passed a highly creditable examination and has already been appointed surgeon of a Liberia emigrant steamer.

☞ At the present time Rev. Phœbe A. Hanaford is doing a very successful business in robbing the brothels of New Haven of their depraved inmates. She seems to enter upon this business with her whole soul, and is not afraid to go wherever duty calls her. She has visited several places where ladies as a general thing, would not dare to go; but she enters, and has never yet been insulted by any one. She has been seen walking on the streets with fallen women, arm in arm, and heard pleading with them to turn from their wicked ways. Many of them have already taken shelter in the "Home for the Friendless," and it is very providential that such an institution has been organized, as without it little could be effected in the way of reclaiming these fallen creatures.

☞ A very important and significant event is to take place in England in February next. Louise, fourth daughter of the Queen, is to wed Lord Lorne, son of the Duke of Argyle. It will be the first time, in the history of England, for over two centuries, that a subject becomes so closely allied to the throne. The fortunate young man is twenty-seven years old, a member of the House of Commons, and an author.

☞ The new form of Protestantism—protesting against the Pope's dogma of infallibility—is spreading. A Roman Catholic party in Munich have protested, in a document circulated by them, against the doctrine of Infallibility, and declare that they will remain true to the old faith in which their fathers lived and died."

☞ Boston has a population of 250,701.

☞ The Princess of Prussia is said to be her own milliner and dressmaker.

☞ Pope Pius is a much older man than many think. He recently completed his eighty-sixth year.

☞ The fruit harvest of 1870 is described by the Gardener's Magazine as one of the best within the experience of the present generation.

PRAY RIGHT UP.—Some years ago a slave in Virginia named Jack was remarkable for his knowledge of the gospel, and especially for his freedom from all gloomy fears in regard to his future eternal happiness.

A professing christian, a white man, who was of a very different temperament, once said to him: "Jack, you seem to be always happy. I wish you would tell me how you manage to keep steadily in this blessed frame of mind."

"Why, massa," replied Jack, "I just fall on the promise, and I pray right up!"

How many desponding christians there are who might profit by these words of the happy slave, now a freedman!"

TOKENS OF LOVE.—I would also enforce on myself that to give money is the least gift we have to give, in token of love. Love, while producing self-denial, also produces generosity in every way in which we can possibly show kindness. Love is not always counting its pence. Then, dear friend, let us behold, as in a glass, every day, more of the glory of God, till we are changed into his image. Let us get heat by living near the furnace of love. May he mellow our hearts into his own Spirit. May the fountain poured in overflow to all around.

For the World's Crisis.

"LORD, TAKE ME IN."

Lord, take me in,—
Into thy tender care,
Into thy pasture rare,
Into thy garden fair;
Keep me from sin.
Let me ne'er wander far,
Be thou my guiding star,
Let naught my sweet peace mar,—
Lord, take me in.

Lord, take me in,—
Into thine own strong arms,
Into thy grace's charms,
Into love's waveless calms,
Thy smiles to win;
Then I shall happy be,
Then I shall Jesus see,
Jesus, who died for me,—
Lord, take me in.

Lord, take me in,—
Into the land of rest,
Into that home, the best,
Into thy kingdom, blest,
From the world's din;
Then I'll be ever glad,
Then I'll be never sad,
Then I'll be where the bad
Thou'lt ne'er take in.

L. C. McKinstry.

For the World's Crisis.

HIS COMING AGAIN.

"When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."

The most glorious coming and appearance of the Son of God may be reckoned his people's glory. For their sakes he came into the world, suffered, died, was buried, but rose and ascended on high; and for their sakes he will return. To this end will Christ come again, to receive his people unto himself, that where he is there they may be also.

He did not leave us to return no more; he has given us his word that he will come again. Let us rely upon his blessed promise. We have frequent tokens that show us he forgets not his word. We daily behold the signs of his coming, foretold by himself. Though that evil servant shall say in his heart, My Lord delayeth his coming, yet let the saints of God lift up their heads, for their redemption draweth nigh. He who came to purchase will will surely come to possess. Think you Jesus will have us forsake all, and be hated of all, and then forsake us? No, never; far be such a thought from our hearts.

What a glorious day will that be, when we can look up and say, Lo, this is our Lord, we have waited for him. It will not be just such a coming as the first, for then he was poor and despised of men. He will not come, careless ones, to be spit upon and rejected; but at that time when they shall see his sign, all the tribes of the earth will mourn because of him, and will call for the rocks and the mountains to fall on them, to hide them from the face of Him that sitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. They shall see the Lord Jesus whom they have neglected, whose word they have disobeyed, whose ministers they have abused, whose servants they hated, now sitting to judge them. For we read, "He that overcometh and keepeth my words unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations; and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers."

I charge ye, careless ones, to set yourselves seriously to ponder on these things. "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished." That day will bring the greatest joy to his people, and the greatest terror to the wicked. "There is now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." For as Christ, our head, is anointed both king and priest, so in him are his people made unto God both kings and priests, to reign and rule with him forever.

The crown of righteousness which was laid up for them, shall by the righteous Judge be given them at that day. They are not honored with empty titles, but with real dominions. Christ will grant them to eat and drink at his table in his kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel. The Lord himself will give them possession, with these applauding expressions, "Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

Why will any one slight such offers of mercy and such honors? Why turn from such blessed promises, and shut your eyes, and stop your ears, to such words of life and joy? Do we believe this, and yet forget and neglect it? Let us not be slothful, that we may hope for a part in this glory. Lay your treasure up in heaven, from whence we look for the Lord. E. H. Temple.

END OF FAITH.

"Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls."

This text is one of deep interest to every Bible student. We conclude that whatever has an end must of necessity have had a beginning.

There are two important themes in the text. Faith, and salvation of faith.

In Heb. 11: 1, the apostle tells us that "faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Noah was moved to action by his faith, as it is said of him, "By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house, by the which he condemned the world, and became heir to the righteousness which is by faith."—Heb. 11: 7. Noah, being a just man in his generation, found grace, as we read in Gen. 6: 8—"But Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord." God saw that wickedness was great upon the earth, and he purposed in himself to destroy the world, and revealed the thing to Noah, and told him to prepare an ark, as recorded in Gen. 6: 14—"Make thee an ark of gopher wood." Now Noah was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision, but went about the work just as every honest man would. His faith came by hearing, as it is said by the apostle, "So, then, faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God."

Faith is one of the christian graces. Without it, it is impossible to please God. "For he that cometh to God, must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."—Heb. 11: 6.

I have long been of the opinion that there is no one sin that will prove the destruction of so many, as the sin of disbelieving what God says. The prophets, patriarchs, and apostles, all believed God. They took him at his word. Faith has had its beginning with all of God's people, and whatever has had a beginning will have an end, sooner or later; as, in our text, we are to receive the end of faith, which will be salvation to us, or change of condition; for salvation is change of condition. So when faith is ended, we shall walk by sight; for faith will be swallowed up in sight, and hope in full fruition. "For now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face."—1 Cor. 13: 12.

There are three kinds of salvation brought to view in the Bible,—common, or universal, special, and eternal. In Jude 3, we find the common; in 1 Tim. 4: 10 the special; and in Heb. 5: 9 the eternal,—"And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." The common salvation will give every one a resurrection from death, as it is written, "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." The Lord makes an even thing of it. The same number that die in Adam will be raised to life again; and if we in life have sought the special salvation found in 1 Tim. 4: 10, we shall be saved from the second death, and be made partakers of the eternal, brought to view in Heb. 5: 9. For Christ is "the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him."

Then if we do not obey him, we shall go into the lake of fire, as true as the Lord has spoken it. But, says one, I cannot believe that God will ever destroy one whom he has made in his own likeness. That is disbelieving what the Lord says. Go with me to Paul's letter to the Galatians (5: 19–21), and read: "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings, and such like; of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God."

Do not flatter yourselves that God will save you, unless you obey him; for he says he will not, and you had better believe it, before it is too late. Then come now to the great fountain of life, and be saved, for soon Jesus will come, the Author of eternal salvation, and take his children home. "Even so, come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly."

WOMAN'S WORK.

Burying out of sight her own unhealing smarts;
Letting in the sunshine on other clouded hearts;
Binding up the wounded and healing of the sick,
Bravely marching onward through dangers dark and thick.

Letting fall her own tears when only God can see,
Wiping off another's with tender sympathy;
Learning by experience, teaching by example,
Yearning for the gateway golden, pearly, ample.

* * * * * * * *

Fresh grave in the valley—tears, bitter tears, regret;
One more solemn lesson that life may not forget;
Face forever hidden, race forever run,
"Dust to dust," a voice saith, and woman's work is done.

CONSCIENCE TOWARD GOD.

Paul said, that prior to his conversion he had "lived in all good conscience before God." Acts 23: 1. This was when he was under the law. He was not a christian then, and did not profess to be. After he became a follower of Jesus, he still obeyed the inward monitor. "Herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offense toward God and toward man." Acts 24: 16. Here lies the secret of his stability. There were no "ups and downs" in Paul's religious life. He lived according to the dictates of an enlightened conscience. He was not strict by fits and starts,—at one time self-indulgent, at another rigorous. He lived by rule. There was uniformity and consistency in his course.

Whatever our talents, or education, we may imitate Paul in this particular. If we cannot equal him in ability, we can be his equal in conscientiousness.

1. Cultivate the habit of obeying conscience. Paul said he exercised himself in this particular. He practised at it all the while. Any faculty of body or mind is strengthened by continual use. The sailor can discern a wreck or a sail at sea much further than the landsman. Conscience may be quickened so, that the slightest departure from duty will give pain; or it may become so stultified, that the worst crimes excite no alarm. The greatest calamity that can befal a human being, is to have a seared conscience. Guard against this as you would against hell itself.

But the conscience does not become seared at once. This fearful work is done by degrees. If you are, in any respect, disobeying the inward monitor, the process of searing is going on. Then exercise your conscience. Let it pass judgment upon all you do and all you say. Respect its decisions. Obey its verdict. Submit to whatever penalties it inflicts. Let its reign in the soul be undisputed.

1. Have a conscience void of offense toward God. Make a conscience of the duties you owe to God. These duties are paramount. Our highest allegiance is to our Creator. He has the first claim to our obedience. If we are conscientious toward any one, it should be toward God. Yet many, even professing christians, are lacking on this vital point. They make no conscience of their duties to God. In other respects, they may be blameless; but in this, they are greatly at fault. An appointment made with a fellow-being is carefully kept. Their word is at stake. But the most trivial excuse relieves all uneasiness for a failure to meet God at the appointed time and place—be it in the closet or at the prayer-meeting. The reason so commonly assigned, "I do not feel like it," is the strongest reason why we should hold a season of communion with God. When we do not "feel like" praying, it is because something is wrong. Things will never become better until we get to God and obtain his blessing upon our souls. We should, then, make our attendance upon all the means of grace a matter of conscience. Let it become so tender upon this point that the society of the dearest friends you have upon earth will become irksome, if it keeps you from paying proper worship, at the appointed time, to the Most High.

Exercise yourself to have a conscience void of offense toward God, in respect to the use of your property. God giveth the power to get wealth. You are not your own. Your property is not your own. It belongs to God. If you were ever converted, you made a consecration of it to his service. But do you use it to his glory? Do you feel as troubled when you squander any of it to gratify pride or vanity,—either in your apparel, your house, your furniture, or, worse still, in the house of worship,—as you would if you had misappropriated money that did not belong to you? Are your promises of money to the cause of God, as sacredly kept as your promises to your fellow-man for a material equivalent? Is your subscription to a benevolent object as good as your note? Do you pay your preacher as honestly and conscientiously as you do your lawyer or your merchant? Many are utterly lacking in these important particulars. They may be honest in the estimation of the world, but they have not a conscience void of offense toward God. They seem to feel perfectly easy while neglecting the plainest duties they owe to him. They may stand well in business circles, but they certainly have no right to call themselves christians. Sterling principle must lie at the foundation of all true christian character.—Earnest Christian.

PAPAL INFALLIBILITY.

It is somewhat remarkable that the temporal status of the Pope, which had experienced no change for so many years, and bade fair to remain unchanged for an indefinite period of time, should meet, on the heels of the proclamation of the infallibility dogma with so many, so radical, and (in a Catholic point of view) such adverse changes. Following so swiftly on this assumption of divine attribute, people not prone to regard remarkable occurrences as special manifestations of Divine Will, cannot be blamed if they see in these events the hand of the Almighty. Some of these changes are very happily epitomized by the Rev. Dr. Cumming, in a recent lecture delivered at Liverpool on the subject stated in the caption to this article, and which we find reported in one of the papers of that city. No sooner had the Pope, says Dr. Cumming, pronounced the dogma of infallibility, thus assuming to himself a divine attribute, than he heard the first sounds of a war which, in its proportions, in its area, and in its intensity, was more a universal massacre than a war. On that very day Napoleon—the "eldest son of the church," as he was styled—wrote to Cardinal Antonelli that he must recall his troops from Rome—the troops that had upheld the Pope's temporal power for twenty years. Then followed the overthrow of Napoleon and Eugenie, erstwhile the most powerful supporters of the Pope in Christendom. Austria, even, long the dungeon of Europe, always the guardian of the Pope when no one else could be found to support him, shocked at the Pope's assumption of an attribute of Deity, tore the concordat into shreds and cast it to the winds, and renounced the Pope's jurisdiction in Austria, root and branch. Then Austria passed a law granting liberty of the press, liberty of conscience, and freedom of education throughout the length and breadth of the land. Swiftly following the retiring soldiery of France came the armed forces of Victor Emmanuel, intent on securing the one fond dream of all patriotic Italians, the unity of Italy. They thundered at the gates of Rome; the foreign levies of His Holiness were compelled to surrender; and when his own people were asked by the plebiscite to say whether they would have the Pope or Victor Emmanuel to be their King, they by an overwhelming majority preferred Victor Emmanuel; and yet Victor Emmanuel was an excommunicated person—not entitled to Christian baptism or Christian burial. The consequence was that the Pope was sent to the Leonine city denuded of his tiara and stripped of his splendor.

Dr. Cumming mentions an incident in connection with the ceremony of proclaiming the dogma of infallibility, we do not remember to have seen described in other accounts of the occasion. Here it is:

"It was decided by 535 voices—many of them voices of Bishops in the air, bishops representing petty dioceses in Italy—that the Pope was infallible; and then came the great event of the proclamation of that infallibility. His holiness posed himself—placed himself outside an eastern window of St. Peter's in his gorgeous robes, expecting the first rays of the rising sun to shine upon him and to cover him with an apparel of splendor. But the sun did not seem to rise to the occasion, for never was there a sky in Rome so black with clouds as on that same morning, and never was the air so murky or dim; and when the Pope rose to speak, the thunder rolled in crashing reverberations throughout the length and breadth of St. Peter's the lightning flashed from pillar to pillar with unearthly splenpor, and so startled was an eminent member of the Ecumenical Council that he leaped to his feet, and exclaimed suddenly, and as if by inspiration, 'God has sent down another Mount Sinai with its lightning and thunder into the midst of St. Peter's.' After that a candle was brought down, as he could not get the light of the sun, and by its light he read the decision of the Ecumenical Council pronouncing him to be infallible."

Certainly, in a superstitious age all these sudden changes and signs would be regarded as having a particular significance—as marks, indeed, of the Divine displeasure. However they may now be regarded, one lesson they teach is plain—to wit; that kingdoms, nor empires, nor infallibility-assuming Popes can stay the onward march of liberal principles and progressive thought, bray they never so loudly of kingly prerogative, "divine right," and Papal infallibility.—Journal.

THE LEAVEN WORKING.

The following is a list of subjects advertised in the daily papers of the city, to be discussed by the pastor of one of the old school churches, called the Calvary church. The pastor, Mr. Bishop, is reputed to be an accomplished Hebrew scholar, and no doubt these lectures will tell upon the community.

As far as I can learn, there has never been any preaching here upon the second Advent, outside of the churches; but from what I heard Mr. Bishop say a few evenings since, I infer there is deep feeling upon the subject. He said the subject had been upon his mind for a long time, and he was so burdened with it that he could not defer preaching upon it any longer; and since he has decided to hold it up to the public, his mind has been comparatively at rest.

I heard the pastor of the first Methodist church (the largest in the city) say in a sermon, that there were probably those now living who would see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven. I think there is good soil here for the seeds of the Advent. I have written to several Advent preachers, and those having tents, to come over and help us; but no one has responded to the invitation; probably for the reason that other engagements have prevented. I believe the Lord has many children who are not identified with the Second Adventists, and he will find them when he makes up his jewels. We know he can work without human instrumentality. He can by his Spirit impress this and all other truths upon the mind. He can also raise up and send forth laborers into his harvest from among those who have not been committed to this subject.

I shall watch with interest the effect of these lectures, and also hope that the tent "Evangelist" will find it convenient to commence its campaign next season at this place.

Newburgh, N. Y. D. N. Smith.

"The Rev. Mr. Bishop desires us to say that he intends to preach to-morrow evening the first of a series of sermons on the following subjects:

I. Whether God intends us to study the prophetic Scriptures; or whether that part of the Bible which relates to the future is sealed to the Christian church and ministry?

II. Whether Christ is to come before he begins to reign; or whether he is to come after the period of his kingdom has been finished, and when all things are to be cleared away in judgment?

III. Whether the Jews shall ever return to their own land; or whether Jehovah has forsaken Israel?

IV. Whether wicked men and seducers will wax worse and worse; or whether the world will gradually submit to the gospel and enter into covenant with God?

V. Whether the Church, composed of those who are alive as well as sleeping, will ever be caught up into the clouds to meet the Lord in the air; or whether such a thought is a delusion?

VI. Whether the Gentile empires are to be dominant until the final judgment; or whether God is about to set up a kingdom in the midst of the kingdoms and a dominion which shall extend from sea to sea.

VII. Whether during the period of the millenial kingdom the Church shall reign as a bride with Jesus, in heavenly places, over a regenerated earth; or whether reigning 'over the earth,' (Rev. v. 10,) is only a poetic and meaningless expression?"

TRUST.

Great God, my weakness I confess,
There is no virtue, Lord, in me;
Yet I thy tender mercy bless,
That I can humbly trust in thee.
Led by thy hand, I tread along,
Nor can I fall, for thou art strong.

Thy promises, though rich and deep,
I know full well can never fall;
Thy word gone forth thou'lt ever keep,
So I will trust and venture all.
If I but true and faithful be,
Thou'lt be what thou hast said to me.

Though fierce the wind and wild the storm,
And dark the night and rough the way,
While thou art near I fear no harm,
For thou my fainting heart will stay.
Though dangers thick infest my road,
I trust the strength of Jacob's God.

Though raging billows roar and foam,
And would my little bark o'erwhelm,
On life's rough sea I'm not alone,
I trust thee, Father, at the helm.
Thy word with peace my bosom fills,
If thou but utter—"Peace, be still."

But have I always looked to thee
For help to tread the perfect way?
O God, it is a grief to me
That I have ever gone astray
I must confess I've oft forgot
To trust in thee, whate'er my lot.

How oft had I escaped the snare,
If I had but to thee repaired;
How oft when I was filled with fear,
And had of help almost despaired,
Wouldst thou have shown thy smiling face,
And saved me by thy wondrous grace.

O God, in thee I'll e'er confide,
Though I have sinned, I've been reproved;
I know that I shall e'er abide,
If I but trust in thee unmoved.
Though dangers wild I yet shall meet,
Thou'lt safely guide my willing feet.

A CHRISTIAN HERO.

The Daily Mail, in an article on the visit of the Rev. Robert Moffatt to Glasgow, says:—

"Fifty-four years ago a young Scotsman, talented, ambitious, and inspired by religious feeling and unconquerable energy, set sail for Africa on the sublime mission of love. In the noblest spirit of self-sacrifice he relinquished what the most of us would consider the pleasures of life—prospects of fortune, social position, fame, the company of pleasant friends, and the society of scholars and men of science—all, indeed, which is commonly supposed to render life worth living, he willingly gave up, to spend his life in unceasing toil amongst gross and utterly savage tribes, in the endeavor to educate, reclaim and civilize them. For upwards of half a century he has labored at his self-appointed task with unwearied assiduity, and now comes back to find himself amid strange (but not unfriendly people)—a new generation from which he misses most of the old familiar faces of his youth. He left this country shortly after the collapse of the First Empire with Napoleon I. a captive at St. Helena; he has lived to see the collapse of the Second Empire, with Napoleon III. a captive at Wilhelmshohe.

During his absence the whole political conformation of the Continent has been revolutionized—boundaries have been altered, kings dethroned, empires overthrown; yet we question if any really greater work has been done in Europe during all these years than that which has been accomplished without the accessories or pomp of senate-house or battle-field by Robert Moffatt. Austerlitz, Waterloo, Trafalgar, and Sedan were splendid victories, and will ever be accounted such by the historian; but the victories gained by this humble christian, alone and single-handed, at Erromanga, in Namaqua Land, and in the Bechuana country, if they will not be accounted greater by the writers of history, will certainly be valued infinitely more highly by Him who makes and controls both history and historians.

Mr. Moffatt, in his address in the Queen's Rooms, alluded to his labors; how he had found the Bechuanians ignorant and naked, without a written language and utterly debased, and how he had left them to a certain extent educated and clothed, with a written language and the foundation of a literature—to a certain extent civilized. The audience, especially the old friends of the speaker, if any were there, must have been deeply affected and impressed to find that Mr. Moffatt had almost forgotten how to use his native tongue. So utterly cut had he been from English and civilized society, that it is only with great difficulty now that he can speak English. Surely the man who went out young and strong, full of vigor and life, to come back to his native country old, gray-haired, and bent down with the incessant labors of half a century amongst savage tribes, deserves the warmest welcome which his countrymen can afford him. We are glad to find that he has received such a welcome, and in common with the civilized world trust that his illustrious son-in-law, Dr. Livingstone, will also return to find that greeting from his countrymen to which his labors so well entitle him."

WONDERS OF THE TELEGRAPH.

The press dispatches from Europe to New York during the last four weeks numbered about one hundred thousand words. New York has been better posted on the issue of the war each day than London, Paris or Berlin. These dispatches have almost wholly been sent by a single cable, full one-third of the whole to a single daily paper, and with marvelous rapidity and accuracy. Familiar as we are with the work of the telegraph, it has been a marvel to us. To hundreds of thousands of minds the whole process is a deep enigma. Here is a man sitting in a dark room at Heart's Content. The ocean cable terminates here. A fine wire attached thereto is made to surround two small cores of soft iron. As the electric wave produced by a few pieces of copper and zinc at Valentia passed through the wires, these cores became magnetic enough to move the slightest object. A looking-glass, half an inch in diameter is fixed on a bar of iron one tenth of an inch square and half an inch long. On this tiny glass a lamp is made to glare so that its light is reflected on a tablet on the wall. The guage of the cable is denoted by the shifting of this reflected light from side to side. Letter by letter is thus expressed in this fitting odium in utter silence on the wall. There is no record made by the machine except as the patient watcher calls out to a comrade the translated flashes as they come, and which he records. It seems a miracle of patience. There is something of awe creeps over us as we see the evidence of human touch three thousand miles away swaying that line of light. By such a delicate process as this, and after being repeated from line to line five times before its ultimate copy is in New York, have the great battles been recorded in our daily papers with great particularity and sent through the Union. Nothing like it has ever before been accomplished. The enterprise of the New York press, of a single press in New York, has eclipsed that of the wealthiest and ablest presses in Europe. It is characteristic of the nation to do its work grandly and well.—Jour. of Telegraph.

THE MOST REMARKABLE EVENT OF THE AGE.

The World Evagelical Alliance, it will be remembered, was to hold its convention in New York city, but owing to the breaking out of the present gigantic war between France and Germany, it was postponed. It is now proposed to change the place of holding—to where our reader would say? No other than the city of Rome! Since old Infallibility with his old fogy inquisitorial ideas of civil and religious liberty was obliged to surrender to the demand of tolerant Italy, and give up his temporal power and the government of his state, civil and religious liberty was at once enthroned in Rome! Under this new state of affairs the Pope is powerless to kidnap any more Jewish babies, to punish any more Jewish priests by flaying, to imprison any more disobedient bishops, to forbid the erection of any Protestant churches, to interfere with the right of private judgment in matters pertaining to religious belief.

By all means let the alliance hold its meeting at Rome, right over the spot where thousands of hapless heretics were tortured to death under the shade of the Vatican. What a fitting rebuke this would be to the promulgation of the greatest humbug of the age, the infallibility dogma! Verily it will show we are living in a humanitarian age in spite of the efforts of Pope, Cardinals, Bishops, Priests, Jesuits, and other submissive and bigoted tools of the Romish Church. Toleration exists in every country of Europe, excepting Catholic Portugal. Since that shameless royal prostitute, the "eldest daughter of the Church," Isabella, was obliged to flee from Spain, that country immediately removed the disabilities from the freedom of worship. It only remains for Portugal to follow suit, and then there will not be a square foot of ground left in all Europe where "old Infallibility" could prevent by his will the freedom of worship and conscience.

"Turn to the Right."—The late Bishop of Litchfield was once traveling in a railway-carriage in England, when a blustering man exclaimed,

"I should like to meet that Bishop of Litchfield; I'd put a question to him that would puzzle him."

"Very well," said a voice out of another corner, "now is your time; for I am the Bishop."

The man was rather startled, but presently recovered, and said,

"Well, my Lord, can you tell me the way to heaven?"

"Nothing easier," answered the Bishop; "you have only to turn to the right, and go straight forward."

First Step in Prayer.—He that makes but one step up a stair, though he is not much nearer to the top of the house, yet has stepped from the ground, and is delivered from the foulness and dampness of that. So in the first step of prayer: "God be merciful to me a sinner." Though a man be not established in heaven, yet he has stepped from the world and the miserable comforts thereof.

Dr. Hall tells the story of a Scotchman who sung most piously the hymn,—

"Were the whole realm of nature mine,
That were a present far too small,"

and all through the singing was fumbling in his pocket to make sure of the smallest piece of silver for the contribution box.

LIGHT IN DWELLINGS.

Changes in the construction of buildings intended for the occupation of families are constantly made as science and art indicate improvement; but there is much yet to be done, especially for those who dwell in large cities.

The pale and delicate appearance of many residents of our cities manifests a lack of robust physical health, and the habits of many too plainly show a want of mental vigor. Undoubtedly there are various causes for this sickly condition of the minds and bodies of those who dwell in densely populated places, but it is probable that one of them—and not the least important—is that the inhabitants of cities do not get enough of the health-giving light of the sun.

Observation has shown that in the vegetable as well as the animal kingdom, the action of light is essential to many of the operations of Nature. Plants which grow in dark places have not the green color which the sun's light gives them, and in the highest order of the animal creation we find that men who sleep a considerable part of the day, and live under gas lights, have not the bronzed complexion which the industrious farmer, who spends his days in open fields, receives from the rays of the sun, nor do they enjoy that vigorous health which men who live in light possess.

Young women generally desire a fair complexion; but how fearful is the sacrifice made to secure it! Of the women who dwell in cities, not one in ten grows to mature age in good health, and what a vast amount of physical suffering is endured in consequence of the want of it. There can be no real satisfaction in life where health is wanting, and those who sacrifice it at the command of fashion and false notions of delicacy and beauty, entail misery upon themselves and their children.. Physicians' fees make a considerable item in the expenses of every family, and in a great measure this augmentation of the cost of living results from ignorance or disregard of the laws of our existence. Glass might be advantageously used to a far greater extent than it now is, with undoubted benefit to the health and convenience of the people, and a profusion of light in dwellings would prove a more effective preventive of dyspepsia, and many of the other "ills which flesh is heir to," than the numerous nostrums sold by medical charlatans.

"Let there be light," was the command of Omnipotence, when darkness covered the face of the earth, and we should not ignore the many benefits which this powerful agent, in all the operations of nature, confers upon us.—American Engineer.

VITALITY OF AMERICAN WOMEN.

The National Medical Journal for April has a paper on the Vitality of American Women, from the pen of S. L. Loomis, A. M., M. D., Professor of Chemistry in the Howard University, which claims that the present modes of education have much to do with the decay of physical vigor in American women. Mental labor—brain work—says Dr. Loomis, consumes the vital energies the most rapidly of any occupation that can engage the human being. In recapitulating at the close of the article, the following statements are made:

1. A child should not enter a school-room before eight years of age for the purpose of study.

2. From eight to twelve, no studies involving close reasoning should be allowed. The hands, feet, eyes, ears, and body generally should have careful instruction. Constant physical activity is the normal condition of a child, and any effort to abrige or suppress this must result disastrously; this activity is absolutely necessary for the circulation of the blood. But very few persons can stand absolutely still for twenty minutes without fainting. The contraction of the muscles, so necessary for the circulation of the blood, being wanting, the heart is not sufficiently supplied, and syncope follows. Hence the absurdity and utter impossibility of keeping children still.

3. From twelve to fourteen, health should be the first object; all else subservient.

4. At fifteen, education should begin in earnest, to be completed generally at twenty, or professionally at twenty-five.

However the reader may differ with Dr. L., he appears to have medical science and the results of a long series of observations on his side. Brain and typhoid fevers, of a fatal type, no doubt, in innumerable instances, have been superinduced by too early and too exhaustive application to books and studies.—Rural Amer.

EVILS OF MODERATE DRINKING.

Dr. Jackson says in Laws of Life, under the above heading:—

"A person whose blood has been poisoned by little drinks of alcohol, till it has become nigh like fermented grape juice, dies as truly by the effects of that poison as though he drank a quart a day. Meanwhile the death process is going on, he is able to be about, attend to all his business, perform after the fashion the office of husband and father, feel himself quite well qualified for any official duty, whether civil, religious or political which his fellows may have conferred upon him; he reasons with measurable clearness, shows a fairness of judgment, considers himself, and is considered by others, as quite competent to the duties of his station. His doom, however, is sealed. He is a modern Damocles, taking dinner with a modern Dyonysius,—over his head is the keen drawn sword of death, suspended by a single hair, giving warning of his danger, of which he takes no notice, till at length the weapon falls, the stroke comes, and God, in the plenitude of his justice, stands avenged.

A very large proportion of all the deadly diseases which afflict our people, have their origin in the moderate use of alcoholic liquors, in connection with the moderate, or immoderate use of tobacco. These two, with American men, go together; and in order that they shall show destructive and deadly effects, it is not at all needful that their victims should, by debauchery and outrageous dissipation, violate the civilities and courtesies of life. Let the moderate drinker of alcoholic liquors beware. He is going to his grave prematurely from the effect of the liquor he drinks, none the less surely than his more riotous companions."

TRANSFUSION OF BLOOD.

The Philadelphia Ledger relates that this operation, which consists in the actual transfer of the blood of one living body into the veins of another, has been recently performed in the Pennsylvania Hospital, under the following circumstances:

A young man in the upper part of the city was wounded on the inner surface of the upper lip, by tripping and falling on the fragments of a pitcher which he had been carrying in his hand. The wound continued to bleed for ten days, after which time the patient was sent to the surgical wards of the hospital, which were, at the time, under the charge of Dr. T. G. Morton. Several remedies were then applied, and the arteries supplying the face were tied, but without success in controlling the flow of blood. Recourse was next had to cutting down to the common carotid or great artery of the neck, and applying a ligature, so as to obstruct entirely the course of the blood in it. This was done on the 18th of October last. The oozing of blood still continued, but in lessened quantity.

On the following day, or the 19th, the patient was in such a state of extreme exhaustion from the long-continued hemorrhage, that his death seemed imminent, and, as a last resource, Dr. Morton resolved to try the effect of transfusion. We shall not pretend to describe the apparatus used on the occasion, or the details of the operation. Let it suffice for us to say two medical students bared their and arms gave the blood required for the occasion. Five ounces and a half of their blood were infused into the vein of each arm of the patient, the marked good effects of which were evinced in five minutes by a rallying of the pulse and otherwise beginning reaction. There was no further discharge of blood from the original wound, and in ten days the patient was able to walk in the yard, and rapidly regained strength.

A BRAVE GIRL.

There are not many brave girls about in these days, let the girls say what they please to the contrary. We have been watching to see how they maneuvre, and this is the conclusion to which we have come. Many of them are real cowards—they are afraid to keep on the right side of truth. They may not be afraid of the dark, nor of dogs, and spiders, but they are afraid to do what they think is right.

There was Hattie Stone, a bright-eyed, intelligent, sprightly, lovable creature, sitting by her mother, who was trimming her winter bonnet with gay ribbons and beautiful feathers, when Nellie Larkin, one of her playmates, called.

"Is that your bonnet?" inquired Nellie.

"Yes," replied Hattie. "Isn't it pretty?"

"It is very pretty indeed, I think," answered Nellie. "Mine is a poor looking thing beside that."

"Are you not going to have a new one?"

"No; mother says my old one must answer this winter, with a little repairing, and I think it will, myself."

"You will be the only girl in the meeting-house with an old bonnet on," continued Hattie, "and that will make you feel badly."

"No, it will not make me feel badly at all," said Nellie. "I like your new bonnet very much, and at the same time I am contented with my old one."

"Well, I should be afraid that people would laugh at me when everybody else had new bonnets," responded Hattie. "I want to look as well as the rest."

"Mother says it is cowardly to be afraid of what people will say about us, if we are doing what we think is right."

"Then there are a great many cowards in the world," said Hattie, "and I suppose I am one. But you mean to be brave and wear your old bonnet," and Hattie smiled as she said it, for she evidently meant to ridicule Nellie's idea of bravery.

"I don't think it is necessary to be very brave to wear a last year's bonnet," replied Nellie. "I am sure that it is not a great cross to me, although I don't like to be laughed at any better than you do. Mother says she can't afford a better one, and that is enough for me to know, to be satisfied with what I have."

Now, Nellie really did not know that she was a brave girl in deciding to wear the bonnet that she had worn for a year. But she was the bravest girl in the neighborhood. Hattie—poor little mincing coward—was afraid somebody would laugh at her, if she did not have a bonnet as gay as a peacock's tail, and be in the height of fashion. She had not courage to say, "Let others think as they please, I shall do what mother thinks best." How much nobler is Nellie, who dares to follow her mother's counsels, though she may not appear quite so fashionable! Yes, she is the genuine brave girl, unlike thousands who always stop and ask, What will be thought of this or that? what will Mrs. A or Jemima B. say about me if I do thus and so? not having courage to do right, even, lest some one laugh or sneer.—Home Monthly.

"MERCY."

When Napoleon was First Consul of France, a beautiful girl, about fourteen years old, might have been seen one morning at the entrance of one of the French palaces. Her tears and bitter sorrow touched the heart of the porter, who was a tender-hearted man; and he allowed her to proceed. She went straight to the consul; and as he, surrounded by his ministers, was walking through one of the apartments, in the deepest grief the girl threw herself at his feet, crying, "Mercy, sire! mercy for my father!"

"And who is thy father?" said Napoleon graciously; "and who art thou!"

"My name is Lafolia," replied she; "and my father is condemned to die."

"Alas, my child!" said Napoleon, "this is the second time thy father has rebelled against the State. Indeed I cannot help thee."

"Ah, sire!" wept the poor girl, "I know it: I know he has transgressed the law. But, the first time, he was innocent: this time I plead, not because he is guiltless—I plead for mercy, mercy!—oh, mercy for him!"

The lips of Napoleon trembled; tears filled his eyes; and, taking the hand of the child in both of his, he drew her near him, saying,"—

"Yes, my dear child! at thy request I will forgive thy father. It is enough: arise, and follow me."

From this touching incident we may learn after what manner the sinner is forgiven. The young girl said, "I pray not for righteousness: I plead for mercy,—for grace." Napoleon's heart could not resist that plea; and he gave her the desires of her heart. Had she pleaded for righteousness' sake, her case would have been utterly hopeless. He must still have said, "Alas, I cannot help thee!" God cannot help the sinner who brings his own righteousness to him: he has no remedy for such cases. "Our righteousness is as filthy rags," says Isaiah. "Enter not into judgment with thy servant, O, Lord! for in thy sight shall no man living be justified." It would indeed be strange to be justified because of the nature of our filthy rags.

But, instead of your righteousness, plead God's grace. He cannot resist the plea: he never did; he never will until the door of mercy is closed. The publican in the temple smote upon his breast, saying, "God be merciful to me, a sinner!" and Jesus declared that he went down to his house justified rather than the self-righteous Pharisee.—*S. LIGHT BEYOND.

Dark the day and deep the gloom,
Speaking earth's impending doom,
Scarce evolves a cheering ray,
But that night precedes the day;
But beyond it all there's light,
Ever bright.

'Mid the din and clash of war,
'Mid the angry nations' jar,
Blood and sacrifice of life;
'Mid the carnage and the strife,
But beyond it all there's light,
Ever bright.

Hark! the widows wail and moan;
Hark! the helpless orphans groan;
Cease, oh cease this tale of wo,
When will men their Maker know?
But beyond it all there's light,
Ever bright.

Still we groan beneath the curse,
Evil men are waxing worse;
Tales of blood from every clime
Mark the carnival of crime;
But beyond it all there's light,
Ever bright.

Forms of godliness prevail,
Scoffers at the pious rail,
Pleasure-seekers now abound,
Little holiness is found;
But beyond it all there's light,
Ever bright.

Many say "My Lord delays,"
Looking for the fabled days
Of a world's millennium,
Ere the King and kingdom come;
But beyond it all there's light,
Ever bright.

But the night is waning fast,
Joyous dawn will come at last;
Night and gloom and darkness cease,
When we hail the King of peace;
Yes, beyond it all there's light,
Ever bright.

PRIMITIVE THEOLOGY.

When we clearly prove the doctrine of the personal reign of Christ and the saints upon the renovated earth, by an appeal to Scripture testimony, the entire argument is often set aside as worthless, on the simple plea that this is a new doctrine, or else our forefathers, who were as wise as we are, would have understood it. The true reply to this effort to evade the force of revealed truth, is simply this: if the testimony which we now bring from the Bible on this topic was true when first put into the Bible, it is true still, whether our grand-fathers believed, or disbelieved it. If God says a thing is thus or so, that should end all controversy. Were our grand-fathers wiser than God? Did they know anything about the plan of Deity, except what they obtained from the Bible? And have we not the same Bible that they had? Then let us go to the fountain head. What is written? How readest thou?

The belief of our grand-fathers cannot invalidate what we find written in the word of God, nor can their unbelief change what we read therefrom. But for the purpose of exonerating ourselves from the charge of holding a new doctrine, we refer to some of the statements of the primitive saints touching this topic:

Said Irenæus, Bishop of Lyons, A. D. 178, "It is but just that in it [the earth] they [the saints] should receive the fruits of their suffering, so where for the love of God they suffered death, that there they should be brought to life again; and where they endured bondage, there also they should reign."

Said Tertullian, who was born A. D. 160, "A kingdom is promised us on earth, * * * after the resurrection."

Said Augustine, Bishop of Hippo, A. D. 390, "His kingdom will come when the resurrection of the dead shall take place."

Said Cyril, Bishop of Jerusalem, A. D. 350, "Our Lord Jesus Christ then comes from thence [from heaven] with glory at the end of this world, in the last day. For this world shall have an end, and this created world shall be made new, * * * that that fairer world may be made manifest."

A council of over three hundred Bishops convened at Nice, A. D. 325, and unanimously affirmed, "We expect new heavens, and a new earth, according to the Holy Scriptures, at the appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. And then, as Daniel says, the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom."

Said Bishop Methodius, Bishop of Tyre, A. D. 270, "At the conflagration, the creation shall suffer a vehement commotion, as if it were about to die; whereby it shall be renovated, and not perish; to the end that we, then also renovated, may dwell in the renewed world, free from sorrow."

Said Jerome, born A. D. 330, "God will make new heavens, and a new earth; not other heavens and another earth, but the former ones changed into better."

Said Clement, A. D. 96, "Let us every hour expect the kingdom of God in love and righteousness, because we know not the day of our Lord's appearing."

Said Bishop Latimer, who was martyred A. D. 1535, "Let us therefore have a desire that that day may come quickly; let us hasten God forward; let us cry unto him, day and night, Most merciful Father, thy kingdom come."

In a "confession of faith," drawn up by John Bunyan, and signed by over twenty thousand Baptists, presented to King Charles, A. D. 1660, it is affirmed, "He will not only raise the dead, and judge and restore the world, but will also take to himself his kingdom, and will according to the Scriptures reign on the throne of his father David, on Mount Zion, in Jerusalem, forever."

These quotations show that we hold the primitive faith of the church, instead of a new theory; a faith that is both ancient and scriptural; and had it not been for apostasy, this would have been the faith of the church to-day. W. S.

DAY OF THE LORD.

NUMBER ONE.

Christ will appear as the predicted ruler of the land. The coming administration is to be the consummation of the present dispensation; the present order of things will pass away, and the establishment of the everlasting kingdom and reign of Jesus Christ over the earth. Christ will assert his claim and title as the victorious ruler of the race of Adam, to the end that all the kingdoms shall serve and obey him; for his kingdom is an everlasting kingdom.

The Revelator sets forth his dominion over the nations in time to come, to rid the purchased possession of the dynasties of wickedness, to restore the earth to peace, and bring in everlasting righteousness and salvation. The first thing to be looked for in the wonderful plan in the ushering in of the age of glory, is the coming of Christ, who takes away with him the dead saints that now sleep, and also those who are found watching for him.

Good people think of dying, and hope for salvation in heaven through the grave. There is something better than death for those who are found watching for and loving the appearing of Jesus, when he comes. They will be translated, as were Enoch and Elijah. There will be some who will never die. 1 Thess. 4: 16. This class, who will be translated, does not embrace every body, only the select few who watch and pray always. Luke 21.

The coming of Christ and the translation may occur any time. "Take ye heed." We are to watch and pray always, lest coming suddenly he find us sleeping. How will this great change affect this world? It will at once arouse a slumbering church and a wicked world. Then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn (Matt. 24), and they shall "see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory." Then will men know the full meaning of the word "distress." "For the powers of heaven shall be shaken."

I apprehend the coming of Christ and the translation of the saints, the time of trouble, etc., will occur at the commencement of the day of God. Here will terminate the present dispensation. A new order of things will at once take place. The old heaven and earth will pass away, and the new heaven and earth—a new order of things, will appear. How long the day of the Lord will continue, I am unable to say; whether it will be seven years, or one thousand years.

It is evident this day is not limited to twenty-four hours, as some suppose. The work to be accomplished will take a longer period of time than twenty-four hours. The day of the Lord is a period of judgment, known as the day of judgment, in which Satan and his works are destroyed. The judgment is not one act, but a series of events, through a period of time terminating in the consignment of Satan and his seed to the lake of fire, and the full establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth.

The day of judgment, or judgment period, may properly be called a transition period; the closing up of one order of things, and the opening of another; the end of the present state of things, and the establishment of the government of Jesus Christ, which never will be disturbed any more. J. E. CLARK.

WATCH AND WAIT.

"The Lord is at hand."—Phil. 4: 5. Are we ready to hail with joy our coming King? Do we desire the return of our Lord more than anything else; and are we truly watching and waiting for his appearing? Should the heavens at any moment reveal the Son of man "coming with power and great glory" to reward his people, shall we be among the number who shall say, "Lo! this is our God, we have waited for him"? Are we all ready to come before his presence, and to render up an account? When we behold the many signs and wonders in the heavens and on the earth, can we "lift up our heads and rejoice," or are we fearful, "lest coming suddenly" he shall find us "sleeping"?

These are questions of great interest to each one of us; and if we are not able to answer them in the affirmative, and our trust is not wholly in Him who delights to save all that call upon his name, how can we expect to enjoy full peace of mind when the earth quakes and trembles, and "men's hearts are failing them for fear"? O let us be awake to more earnest watchfulness, and seek to be more diligent in the cause of our Master, "speaking the truth in love" to those around us, if we would hear it said unto us, when the Master comes, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

We certainly have, each of us, a part to do in the act of bringing others to a knowledge of the truth; and let us labor faithfully, for soon "the night cometh, when no man can work." John 9: 4. "Let us, who are of the day, be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith and love, and for a helmet the hope of salvation."—1 Thess. 5: 8. May we endeavor to "walk in the Spirit," and then we shall abound in the "fruits of the Spirit," which are these: "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." Gal. 5: 22, 23.

May the Lord give us of his Spirit, that we may be in possession of all these virtues; and help us to labor for the best good of all, that when he comes we may "stand in him complete." Soon the Bridegroom will come, and then, unless we are in the "patient waiting forChrist," having on the wedding garment, we shall not be ready to go in to the "marriage supper of the Lamb"; and though we may stand without, and knock, and say, "Lord, Lord, open unto us," the answer will be, "I know you not, whence ye are." Luke 13: 25. If we, "according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth," we must of necessity be "looking for and loving his appearing," and will seek to "be diligent, that we may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless."—2 Pet. 3: 14. "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." Luke 21: 36.

"Watch, for the flesh is weak;
Watch, for the foe is strong;
Watch, lest the Bridegroom come;
Watch, though he tarry long."

MAN NOT IMMORTAL.

"Who only hath immortality."—1 TIM. 6 16.

In the above passage of Scripture, we are plainly taught that God only possesses immortality; and if people would take the testimony of God's word as it reads, they would never come to the conclusion that man has an immortal soul.

The more I search the Scriptures, the more I see a beautiful consistency in them; and I wonder that so many stumble over the plain truths therein revealed. I know the Bible would not teach anything contradictory,—as it must if it also taught immortal-soulism, which it does not. I have been much interested in reading Bro. Grant's five works on this subject, and I would advise those who read the Crisis to send thirty-five cents for them, and you will find they show that the Bible is harmonious on the subject. We might justly expect it would be so when rightly understood.

Unless we are prepared to admit that man had a pre-existence—as the spirits teach—we must believe that whatever has a beginning, will also have an end; and as man is perishable, he can lay no natural claim to a deathless state. Many believe that the spirit manifestations are absolute proof of man's immortality—as though God's word could be thrown aside for the teachings of lying spirits. It only proves the fulfillment of prophecy, as taking place in these last days. Satan would have us believe his lies instead of God's truth.

When we read, "The dead know not anything," and, "In that very day his thoughts perish," we have no room to doubt on this point; for "holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." Let us believe the Bible, if every false theory falls to the ground. "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence."

Heathen nations conceived the idea of the immortality of man, as it seemed to them a beautiful thought; and this doctrine has been handed down to every successive generation. Truly men are "turned unto fables." They cannot endure sound doctrine.

The doctrine of the resurrection of the dead is said little about by popular theologians. It is evident why this is so. Were man immortal, it would be superfluous.

The same is true of the second coming of Christ. If men went to their reward at death, there would be no need of a judgment. But we see that without the Savior comes to raise the dead, "then they which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished."

Many would be wise above what is written. Let us take the Bible for our guide, if it destroys men's creeds. The apostle says, "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit." People will do well to take this advice. The Bible comes first; science and philosophy afterwards.

We are looking for the coming of the Lord to give immortality and eternal life to all his faithful ones. Then shall death's cruel ravages no more be felt; no more shall the voice of weeping be heard; for death shall be destroyed. Rejoice! ye way-worn pilgrim. Soon the seal of immortality will be stamped upon thy brow. Be faithful a little longer, for "it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." In view of that "exceeding and eternal weight of glory," I will strive to live close to God, and seek those pleasures that never fade, and those treasures that are everlasting.

O, how few are preparing for that great event, so soon to burst upon an astonished world. Men are "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." They heed not the warning voice. They heap to themselves teachers having itching ears, who being themselves blind, also lead the blind into the ditch.

May God help us to be true christians—dead to the world, but alive unto God. Then when the Life-giver comes, we shall be made immortal, and bloom forever in the paradise of God. There we will meet the friends we saw laid away from our sight. O, the happy greeting! I remember my mother's last message she gave us a short time before she died. "Meet me in heaven," were among her last words. May we all so live that we can meet our friends in heaven, where all parting is unknown. T. L. WAUGH.

Morris, Ct.

MEDITATION III.

FAITH.

Faith is a divine grace, and the very life of the soul below; hence we are said to "walk by faith;" and if our lives are spiritual, it is by the faith of the Son of God that we live the spiritual life.

It is a strange definition of faith given by the apostle to the Hebrews, yet divinely true, "Now, faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen:" that is, though we can only hope for those felicities and glories which are future, yet faith in its glorious acts, can suck the honey and marrow out of them, so as to supply the soul, even in the present time, with the substance of that which is still future; and, by refreshing foretastes of bliss, bring the brightest evidences of celestial excellences, which are not visible to flesh and blood. Thus, by the first-fruits of glory, the soul is ascertained of entering into the land of promise. Faith is begun vision, or seeing things at a distance, and through a glass. Vision is faith finished or perfected, and seeing things at hand, and with the naked eye. It is the bond of union between God and the soul, which can never be broken by all that can befal us in the world; "for this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." And he that believes in God endures all things, as seeing him who is invisible, and waits for the brighter, the diviner views of glory.

Faith is a mutual inhabitation. It is Christ in the soul; hence says the apostle, "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me," and the soul in Christ; hence we are said to "put on Christ," and, being dead to the world and to sin, to have our spiritual life hid with Christ in God. Faith brings to God the greatest honor, and to the soul the greatest happiness; as unbelief does the opposite of both. Faith accounts him faithful who has promised, and composes all within; while unbelief makes the God of truth a liar, and sets the whole soul in all her powers and faculties in an uproar. Faith has won its victories, wrought its miracles, and done wonders in the world; "for to him that believeth all things are possible." And a warrantable faith never fell short of its expectation; yea, often has the goodness of God gone beyond the faith of his saints.

Everything for which I pray in faith shall be granted, and mountains become a plain, and seeming impossibilities disappear. Yet I am not to pray for impossibilities; for though to God all things are possible, yet I could not pray in faith, (and whatsoever is not of faith is sin), for things I am convinced I have no warrant in the word of God to seek or expect; such as, for the sun to stand still, water to flow out of a rock, seas to divide, and rivers to part asunder; though all these things have been done. Again, I am not to pray for or expect things to be done in a miraculous manner for me, when, in the common course of providence, whatever I want can be bestowed on me. I am not to expect the heavens to drop down manna to supply my daily necessity, or that my clothes should wear forty years without waxing old; but I am to believe, in the midst of my wants, that I shall be supplied in a greater or lesser degree, as seems meet to God, by the same liberal hand that showered down the manna in the wilderness; and perhaps in a manner that shall convince me of his special care, and confirm my belief of his singular favor, as much as if the drops of rain were turned into bread for me. His exercising his providence in providing me in raiment anew, should be as endearing to me, as if he exerted his power in keeping what I had from waxing old. But, if I am shut up in some circumstances, where, as far as I can see, nothing less than a miracle can deliver, then faith is to believe the miracle, rather than doubt the promise, or distrust the power of God, as if anything were too hard for him.

But, how comfortable is it, that when I pray, with submission to the divine disposal, only for warrantable things, in faith, I may be assured that I shall both be heard and answered! but if I doubt, then unbelief overturns all; and this is the reason why I cannot prevail. How terrible, amidst my petitions, to doubt if God be able and willing to perform my request, when he has declared himself in the affirmative in both! When I do so, I turn the great God into a mere feeble creature, in denying his power, and (O horrid!) into a liar, in thinking that he has no intention to perform his promise. I see, then, that I should make my petitions with submission, leaving it wholly to God, what he will refuse, what he will chose for me; but that to doubt his love, his power, his faithfulness, is a heinous sin; his power to perform to the extent of the promise, either as to spiritual or temporal things; his faithfulness, that he will perform whatever he has promised; or his love, which, so to speak, waits and longs for the fittest opportunities when his glory and my good may be most advanced in performing the promise for me. Now, as his glory rises, so should my felicity, as I should count it all my happiness to have his glory set on high.

Faith, then, is a triumphant grace. By its wrestling Jacob prevailed, and Jacob's wrestling sons still prevail with God. It always wins the day, secures the blessing, is never sent away empty; will not, cannot be said nay. And by this boldness and confidence of faith, which is the gift of God, God is greatly glorified. Faith looks above created opposition, dwells in eternity, and hangs on the omnipotent arm of God. It wraps itself up in the promise, and cannot be divided from it till it be performed in every respect. It is not terrified at storms, nor disquieted by disappointments, but looks beyond the storm, above the disappointment; rests on the compassion, and fastens on the faithfulness of its glorious Author and Finisher. Faith stretches beyond the narrow confines of time, and takes broad views of the world to come; takes a tour through the land of bliss, the Canaan above, and converses with eternal ages. Faith, looking to the Promiser, sees the way of duty plain; while fear cries out, "There is a lion in the streets, I shall be slain; danger and difficulty in the way, I cannot go." Surely, to him that believeth, all things are possible; but to him that doubts, a mole-hill becomes a mountain. In after ages, I shall be ashamed of my fears and unbelief, but never of my faith. Henceforth let me be strong in the faith, with submission; make my requests with resignation; pray in the confidence of being heard; and believe all things with patience and composure.—Solitude Sweetened.

THE CALL.

"To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts."

The voice of a heavenly Father
Invites thee, O sinner, to-day;
And still wilt thou turn from his pleading?
Still send him unnoticed away?

O, lest on thy life-book be written
A sin thou may'st never remove,
To-day take his offer of mercy;
To-day taste his "fullness of love."

OUR RULE.

Obedience to Jesus Christ is the proof of our friendship for him. Obedience implies a rule. How can we obey if there be not some thing to follow, some rule to regulate our conduct, some standard or guide—something to tell us what to do and what to shun? There is a rule; and our obedience must be according to the rule which God has given us —"Do whatsoever I command you," says Jesus. To obey is to follow the rule which God has given—to do what he commands. This rule is the Bible. The word of God, which is in the Old and New Testaments, is the only rule to direct us how we may glorify and enjoy him—how we must worship and serve him. This is the only rule, and it is a sufficient rule, because it is the word of God. "Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

It is not Peter, nor James, nor John, nor Paul that speaks, but it is God who speaks through them. Men wrote, but God taught them what to write; and it is treating the Bible as a mere human composition, and placing it on a level with any other book, to represent its teachings as only the utterances of the men who wrote it. It is talking like an unbeliever—it is talking like an infidel—to say (as has been said), "Would you abstain from that act because John forbids it? or, would you practice that thing because Peter enjoins it? or, would you believe that because James teaches it? or, would you refuse to follow in that course just because of a little sentence of Paul forbidding it?"

A little sentence of Paul, or Peter, or John! The sentence is not theirs, but God's; God spake through them: and what he spake through these and other inspired men makes up the Bible—the whole word of God—and this is our rule of faith and practice; our rule, because it is God's word and contains his will—God's word and not man's—God's will and not man's—God's sentences, and not the sentences of men; and how can we obey when we follow not the rule God has given? How can we obey and do what he commands, when we explain away the rule, or weaken its force, by calling it the word of men—a little sentence of Peter, or Paul, or John? No; it is God's word; and if we obey Christ, we must follow his rule, his law, his will; we must do what he commands, and depart from what he forbids; for Jesus says, "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." "They who do not what he commands, cannot be his friends. Then how is it with us? Are we his friends, or are we yet among his enemies? For every man is either the friend or the enemy of Christ.—Herald of Truth.

BLESSED REST!

"Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for him."—PSALM 37: 7.

How sweet, when weary and sad, to turn to God's holy word for comfort. A short time ago, as I sat tired and nearly discouraged, thinking of my troubles (which are but few to what many have, for which I thank the Lord), I took up my Bible, at the same time inwardly asking God to so direct me that I might be comforted. My prayer was answered; for the first words I saw were—"Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for him." Blessed rest! I was comforted. Faith grasped the promises. I could rest in the Lord, his grace helping me. As I retired to rest, I seemed to hear Jesus say,

"Child of my love, lean hard."

Peace came to me; and now, when tired and desponding, when some one opposes, no matter what disturbs, I seem to hear something say—"Rest in the Lord."

How I wish all of earth's sorrowing ones would put their trust in God and rest in him alone. I thank him for showing me that rest, for convicting me of sin, and by his Holy Spirit leading me to Jesus. And now I want to be wholly sanctified; to be cleansed from all sin; then I can truly "rest in the Lord." Pray for me, dear brothers and sisters, that I may obtain that blessing, and enter into that rest which I desire above all earthly things, hoping to be ready when the Bridegroom cometh, and be received into "the gates of the city."

I wish to say to all the sorrowing ones, who are pilgrims and strangers on the earth, when sick, sorrowing, persecuted, or weary, "Rest in the Lord," and turn to the blessed Bible, asking God in faith for comfort, and you will surely find it. "Ask, and you shall receive." Praise God for the Bible. It is full of precious promises to those who love the Lord and wait for his coming.

THE SIGN OF GOSPEL PREACHING.

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters."—REV. 14: 6, 7.

A series of articles entitled "The breaking of the day," by P. H. Gosse, F. R. S., has recently appeared in the London Christian. The following extracts from the thirteenth article will be read with interest, and deserve attention:

GOSPEL PREACHING.

We have traveled, in our investigation, over the whole inhabited world, and have found the gospel now preached in every land. God hath signally "visited the Gentiles, and taken out of them a people for his name." No statistics have been handed down to us, of the results, in numbers, of the apostolic evangelization; but it had been computed, on a sober weighing of such materials for judgment as are at our command, that the harvest of souls won to Christ from the missionary activity of the last seventy years will well sustain comparison with that which was the fruit of a like period following the descent of the Holy Ghost. And this without at all including the conversion of souls in those lands which already possessed the gospel. Three thousand faithful men and women from such enlightened lands, with nearly thrice that number of subordinate agents, many of whom are native converts (not to mention a multitude that have died in the work), are, every day that the Lord tarries, augmenting his borders, and proving "that the long suffering of our Lord is salvation."

BIBLE CIRCULATION.

We should have a very inadequate idea, however, of the accomplishment of the glorious sign announced in Rev. 14: 6, if we looked only at the personal, oral testimony of the missionaries. The symbolic angel has, in his hand, the everlasting gospel, which is to be preached. The written word itself, the Holy Scripture, is carried forth. And, in this aspect, the work of the present century excels, beyond all comparison, that of the first. The books of the New Testament were, in succession, being then written; and the century was closing when the canon was complete. And copies of what existed were increased only by the tedious process of handwriting, and were consequently costly and rare. But, by the invention of printing just at the very era when God freed his word from the chains of darkness in which Popery had bound it, copies are diffused by myriads; and that so cheaply, that a poor man can now obtain an entire Bible in his own tongue by merely sacrificing the price of his breakfast.

No sooner was the great missionary enterprise begun, than, in the year 1804, the British and Foreign Bible Society was instituted, with the godlike object of circulating the scriptures through all countries, "whether Christian, Mohammedan, or Pagan." It was soon followed by similar institutions in other Protestant lands; and, as the blessed results of their united labors, during sixty-six years more than one hundred million copies of the entire Bible, or integral portions thereof, have been issued.

And these copies have been chiefly addressed to the need of them that indeed sat in darkness. They have been made in two hundred and ten languages, distributed as follows:

Tongues or Dialects of	D. F. B. S.	Others.	Totals.
Europe	59	4	63
Asia	69	2	71
Archipelago	7		7
Polynesia	17	4	21
Africa	21	4	25
America	11	11	22
	184	25	209

EUROPEAN WORK.

Though I think the terms of the prophecy before us properly limit our view to the heathen world, yet we cannot shut our eyes to parallel developments of the grace of God in Europe. First, in 1827 was formed the Reformation Society, followed by many similar associations of Protestant believers, whose objects were the systematic warning of all who would hear against the doom of Babylon, and the preaching of the gospel to those who were entangled in her toils. These efforts have never been intermitted; and, of late years—in Ireland, in Italy, in Austria, in France, in Spain—how many precious souls have been won to Jesus from Papal idolatry and Papal doom!

And secondly, there is the immense work known as the "Revival" of the last ten or fifteen years. What a wave of blessing from the Spirit of God began then to flow over our favored land! What a multitude of agencies has he raised up for the work of Christ! From all ranks and conditions, from our nobles, from the army and navy, from the middle class, from our artizans, even from our ladies, as he, in his sovereignty of grace, endowed and sent forth "able ministers of the new covenant;" and strata of society never reached before, sought in theaters, and penny gaffs, on race courses, in thieves' dens, in dangerous slums, and haunts of unnameable vice, have yielded trophies to the name of Jesus, worthy to be paired with the debased Australian and the cannibal Fijian.

CAVEATS.

In weighing the prophetic importance of all the facts that have been reviewed, there are one or two points that must be observed. First, that the purpose of God is not to convert the nations to Christ by the preached gospel in this dispensation; but to witness to them, and to gather out of them a people. Secondly, that he alone can decide how far the process is to go on, before the "number of his elect" is completed. Thirdly, that his all-seeing eye may detect numerous instances in which his glad tidings have found individuals of obscure races (such as Papuan slaves in the Archipelago, other remote Asiatics wandering to Singapore, South American Indians, Moslems in Central Asia), reading the Arabic Scriptures, of which we know nothing, and shall never know here. . . .

CONCLUSIONS.

To my own mind the wide gospel preaching of the present century is the most glorious, the most important, the most indisputable, of all the signs which herald the near advent of the Son of man. If the Revelation is indeed a "showing of things which must shortly come to pass," which things Jesus made known by symbols (esemane), there can be no question about the meaning of this sign. In fact, the only symbol in it is the "angel"; all the rest—the gospel, the preaching, its unlimited extent, and the intimate proximity of the whole to "the hour of God's judgment," is expressed in the plainest language. A world-wide gospel preaching was to be the immediate precursor of the close of the dispensation.

THE PAST.

Has such a sign occurred? Let the grand array of facts just detailed answer. Can it be confounded with any other event, or series of events, throughout the past eighteen centuries? Since the apostle saw the visions in Patmos, there has been nothing at all like such an evangelization of the world. It was not possible. Four hundred years ago, the whole of Africa, the vast Indian Archipelago, the entire Pacific, and all the southern hemisphere, were absolutely unknown. It is only a century since Captain Cook discovered the thousand isles of the South Sea, now so radiant with gospel light, and those Australian regions now fast filling with the Anglo-Saxon race. Eighty years ago the Fiji group was undiscovered. Twelve years ago Europeans first had access to the interior of China and to the empire of Japan.*

THE FUTURE.

The sign could not be accomplished till the light of the glorious reformation had broken on benighted Christendom; and the open Bible, multiplied by the invention of printing, had become a common and a valued book. It could not be till some nation of weight had adopted the light and book; a nation of immense resources, of commanding power, of foremost civilization, of naval daring, of restless energy, of world-wide commerce; a nation in which the church of the living God should be mainly contained, and should be able to wield the national resources for the glory of Christ. Such a nation is England of the nineteenth century. There is not, there never has been, another.

There has certainly been no other fulfillment than this in the past. But may there not be in the future? For, if the futurist view of the Apocalypse is correct, this symbol of the flying angel is yet future. But where? The whole inhabited world is now known to us, and the gospel has now reached every part. We may take up Alexander's boast, with far greater truth; there are no more worlds to conquer. Does the futurist look for a preaching in all the world, for a witness, unto all the nations, before the end come? Behold! it is done. The reality of the work, the vastness of the work, are undeniable. The only possible question is of the sufficiency, not of the commencement and progress, of the work. How much further this very work may proceed,—how much more minute and full may be the enlightenment of the nations, before the Lord's purpose be quite reached, I know not; but, beyond all controversy, it is far advanced.

* It is sometimes carelessly, and most falsely, charged against the historical interpreters of prophecy, that they seize, at will, any events in history which can be made to bear a resemblance to the prophetic language, and then give these as the accomplishments of such predictions. This gospel sign, at least, rises above every charge of vagueness. Sir Isaac Newton, in his "Observations on the Prophecies of Daniel" (1756), distinctly speaks of both the European Revolution of the Apocalypse, and the universal preaching—as, at that time, yet future. "The time is not yet come for understanding [the prophets] perfectly, because the main revolution predicted for them is not yet come to pass." "The gospel must be preached to all nations before . . . the end." "An angel must fly . . . with the everlasting gospel to preach to all nations, before Babylon falls, and the Son of man reaps his harvest." "But if the last age . . . be now approaching, . . . if the general preaching of the gospel be approaching, it is to us and our posterity that these words mainly belong, etc." (Op. cit.; Pref.)—Ex.

ROBBING GOD.

Will a man rob God? It seems incredible that a man who believes in God should attempt it. When men rob their fellow-men they expect, in some way, to escape detection and punishment. But he who robs God, can indulge in no such deceptive hopes. His detection is certain; for the eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good. His punishment is sure; for God will by no means clear the guilty. Is it possible, then, that it is ever done? God says, "Ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings."

Do you conscientiously devote a tenth of your income to the cause of God? Are you as careful to pay him his dues, as you are your taxes to the government?

Are your free-will offerings which you promise to the cause of God, carefully paid? If not, do not wonder that you are either barren in your soul, or unfortunate in business. There is that that scattereth and yet increaseth; there is that which withholdeth more than is meet, and it tendeth to poverty.—Earnest Christian.

☞ There are but two religions in all the world—the religion of faith, and the religion of forms. The religion of faith is best expressed in the expiring cry of an English martyr: "None but Christ, none but Christ!" The religion of forms is known in all varieties, by presenting as the object of highest veneration, rite and ceremonies, and saying, in effect: "Any thing but Christ, every thing but Christ."

LIBERAL OFFERS.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

We are anxious to have our paper reach several thousand new readers the coming year, and become a blessing to them. It is the best means we have of sowing the seed of the gospel of the kingdom in some hearts, and we should all awake, and do whatever we can to have its warnings of the coming judgment reach as many new readers as possible.

Some of our preachers have done nobly, and others would gladly help on the good cause, if they could receive aid for their families while they spend their time for the paper. For the benefit of such, the A. C. P. Society, at a recent meeting, by vote authorized the Agent to pay ten per cent to preachers on all collections for the Crisis and Young Pilgrim; and it is hoped they will take hold of the work in earnest, and have great success. Those who understand the expense of publishing a paper, know that it would cost no more to set up the type for twelve or fifteen thousand copies, than it does for a less number; hence, after our regular issue of about nine thousand copies is run off, we could print several thousand more at the cost only of press work and paper. It has, therefore, been concluded by the Editorial Committee and Business Agent, to whom the Society referred this subject, to make the following liberal offers to new subscribers, to induce them to form clubs, and thus make success easy to all who put forth efforts to obtain new subscribers

TRIAL OFFER.

We will send the World's Crisis three months on trial, to new subscribers, for fifty cents. We ask our friends to obtain yearly subscriptions, if possible; but where subscribers can be obtained for only three months, please visit them again, and, if possible, get them to renew before their paper is stopped at the end of three months.

To aid in obtaining new subscribers for 1871, we make the following offer of nearly

Three Months Free.

We will send the Crisis—for the balance of this year, from the time the name is received—free to all new subscribers for 1871, sent in before Jan. 1st.—Rate $2.50.

Now is the time to subscribe, and put forth energetic efforts to obtain new subscribers.

CLUBBING WITH OTHER PAPERS.

As many persons take several papers, and could be induced to take the Crisis, if they could get two papers at club rates, we have accepted offers to club other papers with the Crisis, which will enable our friends to obtain subscribers where it would otherwise be impossible to introduce our paper.

If any of our regular subscribers wish any of the papers on the list at club rates, they can get new subscribers for the Crisis, as it is not necessary that both papers should be sent to the same address.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS THREE & SIX MONTHS FREE.

We will send the World's Crisis six months, and the Phrenological Journal and Packard's Monthly (price $3.00) one year for $3.00; or the World's Crisis three months, with the Rural New Yorker (price $3.00) one year for $3.00; or, three months with the New York Weekly Tribune (price $2.00) one year for $2.00; or three months with the Bee-Keeper's Journal and National Agriculturist (price $1.00) one year for $1.00.

THE SOUTH.

We purpose to leave for the South the first of December. We request the special prayers of the church that our labors may not be in vain. But very little has been done in the South towards spreading before the people the great light now shining upon the subject of the Lord's speedy coming. They are anxious to hear. Shall we not make a noble sacrifice to give them that which we prize more than all the world beside? There is no time to be lost. Passing events show that the great day of the Lord is rapidly approaching. Let us work while the day lasts.

Our purpose is to go into some of the principal cities in the Southern States, and try to arouse the people to a sense of their danger while out of Christ; and show them the evidences that proclaim the coming of Christ at hand. The time appears to have come to go through the South as Bro. Miller and others did in the North nearly thirty years since. It will be recollected that he spent some two thousand dollars more than he received. So now we cannot expect at first that the people in the South will hire halls and pay the expenses. After the truth is planted, they will do what they can. But in consequence of the war desolations, they are not in a situation to give as they would be glad to do, if they had the means. Many in the South are from northern families, whose parents, brothers and sisters are still in the North. Now is the time for those who love the "blessed hope" to assist in sending the light to their southern friends. If much is accomplished, strong men must take hold of the work in earnest, trusting in the Lord to bless the effort. There are true and efficient men who stand ready to go, if the church will sustain them. They cannot go and bear their own expenses, leaving their families destitute at home. Are there not men besides Bro. Tilley who can and will unite with him in raising $5000 to send preachers and tracts through the South? If one soul could be saved by the means, would not the $5000 have done a noble work? How can money be better expended? In what way can we use it to cause more joy in heaven? Come, Brn., take strong hold of this work, and let us push the battle in the name of the Lord. When two great nations like France and Prussia can sacrifice untold millions of property, and hundreds of thousands of lives, giving up sons, fathers and brothers to die on the battle field for mere worldly gain; cannot we do something noble to save men from eternal destruction? What do you say? Will you help? Will you help now? May the Lord direct.

CHICAGO.

We take occasion to say another word in relation to our interesting meetings in Chicago. The Lord has blest them in a special manner. Our last one, Sabbath, Nov. 6th, we think was the best of all. We had a heavenly refreshing. Five were baptized at noon, and others are waiting for another opportunity. Twenty-two have been baptized during the meetings, and thirty have united with the church. Others have expressed a wish to unite. Many new ones have become interested in the evidences of Christ's speedy coming, and do not hesitate to express their sympathy with the subject. We find it generally true that the most devoted members of all churches are satisfied that the end of this dispensation is at hand. The signs of the times, the state of Rome, the moral and political condition of the world, are all proclaiming that we shall soon see Jesus.

☞The best chronological light shows that we may expect our Savior within five years. If this is so, we shall have stronger light, as the end approaches. The true followers of the Redeemer will not be left in darkness, if they will only let the light shine which they have already received.

AT HOME.—On our return home, we found things going on nicely at the office. We have efficient help, who take pleasure in guarding the interests intrusted to their care. Their thorough experience and intelligence enables them to execute their work in a skillful manner. The Lord is blessing our efforts to scatter the light and truth.

TRINE IMMERSION.

It appears from history that in some places "trine immersion" was practised from the third to the sixth century. By "trine immersion" is meant that the one baptized was immersed three times. Says Clement of Alexandria, who lived in the third century, "You were led to a bath, as Christ was conveyed to the sepulchre, and were thrice immersed, to signify Christ's three days' burial."—Mystagog. 2. If Christ had died three times, and was buried three times, then the reason given for "trine immersion" would have some force in its application. As it is, we see none.

In the same century occurred the first case where a substitute for immersion was allowed. It was the case of Novation, who was so sick that he was not expected to live. On account of his low condition, it was decided to pour water around him, hoping it would answer for baptism. After it had been done once, the door was open to do it again; and thus immersion was finally laid aside for sprinkling. Both this and the "trine immersion" we believe to be errors introduced by the "Fathers," so called, in the third century. Says Richard Fuller, in his able work on baptism: "Trine immersion continued to be practised in the West, as well as the East, till the end of the sixth century, when it was decreed by the fourth council of Toledo that the primitive baptism, by a single immersion, should be restored." Inasmuch as the primitive baptism was administered "by a single immersion," it follows that any change after that, as to the manner of administration, must be made without the authority or sanction of Christ, and therefore a departure from the true mode. Let us imitate Christ and the apostles, instead of those who departed from "the primitive baptism by a single immersion." The mode established by Christ and the apostles was the best. We can make no improvement on Christ's example and teaching. When speaking of trine immersion, Tertullian says it was "doing somewhat more than the gospel required."

AFFAIRS IN EUROPE.

The war-clouds of Europe look unusually threatening at the present time. There is a strong probability that there will be a general war throughout Europe. Russia has made a stirring sensation by refusing to abide by a treaty made in 1856, by which the Black Sea was declared to be neutral ground. England is very much excited over the matter, and is getting her war implements ready for action as soon as possible. Men are at work night and day in shipyards, and elsewhere, putting things in fighting order.

The French have gained some advantage over the Prussians during the past week, which has greatly revived the spirit of the people in France, causing them to rally to the standard of war with renewed zeal and hope of success. The Prussians are said to be in a critical condition at present.

The Pope's situation is quite changed. The Italians have entered the Quirinal without his consent, and taken away the church documents, thus trampling on the rights of the Pope, and treating him as a rebel against the Italian government. It is said the Pope thinks he must soon leave Rome for some more congenial place.

EXPLANATION ONCE MORE.

As many do not yet understand the date on their papers, or wrappers, we would say, the date on the paper is the time to which you have paid. If it is 7 Sept. 70, it means that you have paid to last Sept. If Nov. or Dec. 70, it shows that you have paid so much in advance; but if it is 67, 68 or 69, it shows that you are in arrears from that date, and ought to pay up immediately.

BRANCH CHAPEL.—The meeting appointed for Branch Chapel was postponed probably till Dec. 4th, as the interest is so great in Philadelphia, Bro. Hook could not leave, and no one could be got for last Sunday. Due notice next week.

CRISIS FREE.—We send the Crisis free for the remainder of the year only, to those who subscribe for 1871 and send us $2.50 in advance.

PERSONAL.—We learn that Bro. George Storrs has been very sick, but is now recovering. Bro. W. S. Campbell is recovering slowly.

SOME INQUIRIES.

MR. GRANT:—Dear Sir,—Having frequently heard of your method of living, I wish to become more fully acquainted with the same. 1. I wish to know how the dough of your bread is prepared, and baked, etc. 2. Also of your other kinds of bread, or victuals, and what kinds. 3. I also wish to know concerning your drink, what it is, and when taken? And lastly, is it suitable food for students? Will you please answer these questions through the Crisis, and receive the heartfelt thanks of a learner? A STUDENT.

BRO. STUDENT:—We answer your inquiries with pleasure. Our bread is made of Graham meal, wet with cold water, till about thin enough for griddle cakes, and then baked in a hot oven, in patty pans, or tin cups holding about one gill apiece; or, what is better, the cast iron French-roll baking pans, containing one dozen cups united together. If the bread is baked in the latter, the pans should be brought to a baking heat in the oven, and on the top of the stove, before the batter, or dough, is put in. It is also well to let the baking pans stand about five minutes on the top of the stove after the batter is put in them, before putting them into the oven. Be sure and have a hot oven, and give a thorough bake. It will not hurt one to eat this bread when warm. After it gets cold, it can be made as nice as new by dipping it in cold water, and then warming it through in the oven. It is well known that no other one article of diet will enable one to work so long without being tired or hungry. We have not eaten a meal for several years without this bread.

Next in importance to the bread, comes the oat-meal pudding, made just like an Indian hasty pudding; that is, by stirring the oat-meal into boiling water. It will not take more than half as much oat-meal as it would of Indian or Graham meal to make the same bulk, because the oat-meal swells so much. The oat-meal produces an animated, cheerful, happy glow of feeling. It is a very valuable article of food.

Beans boiled till they are soft, without any meat, are well adapted to nourish and strengthen the system. We use them as a part of every meal, when we can get them.

We use all kinds of common fruits in their season, but baked sweet apples stand first and last on our list. Occasionally we eat figs, dates, raisins, walnuts, potatoes, and squashes, but the most valuable are the bread, oat-meal, beans and baked sweet apples. We drink nothing when eating. If one must have drink, let it be a warm drink, and not cold water, as the latter hinders digestion, and often produces pain in the stomach, when mixed with the food. Let the drink be a bread or corn coffee, or simply warm water seasoned; but never use tea or coffee. The best way is to eat slow enough to fully moisten all the food with the saliva. Never wash down the food with drinks. Masticate the food very thoroughly, and swallow it before drinking.

We use no pies or cakes, sweetmeats, butter, sugar, salt, pepper, ginger, mustard, spice, cinnamon, or any other seasoning on any article of food, excepting a little milk on our beans and oat meal pudding. We eat but two meals a day, taking them at 8 A. M., and 2½ P. M. We are neither faint nor hungry between meals. It will be eighteen years the first of next January since we adopted the vegetarian diet, and nine years since we began to live on two meals a day. As the result, we constantly enjoy perfect health. Previous to the adoption of this mode of living, we were troubled with frequent sick-headache, derangement of stomach and bowels, almost every week, but now these things trouble us no more. We have not had the sick-headache once since we adopted this diet.

We avoid feather beds, take a sponge bath every morning; never sleep in a garment worn during the day, and always sleep with an open window in all seasons of the year. We go to sleep in three minutes after retiring. Our rule is to be in bed about seven hours. We prefer to retire at nine and rise at four.

In answer to the inquiry, Is this diet suitable for students? we answer most emphatically it is specially adapted to students. There is no other diet on which a student can accomplish so much. The mind becomes as clear as crystal. The muddy, confused state of the mental powers passes away like the morning fog before the rising sun. We are astonished at the amount of mental and physical labor we are able to perform on this diet. We can preach fifteen times a week, besides attending to our editorial duties, and feel a continual, blessed freshness. It would be a great cross to us to be put back on the old diet, and be compelled to live on the food used by most people. This simple diet is very unfavorable to the growth of the "old man;" but specially adapted to the advancement of the "new creature" in Christ. Those who live on rich food, use tea and coffee, tobacco, and other stimulants, will find it much more difficult to be patient, pure-minded, long-suffering, gentle, meek and kind, than they would if they used only the plain food. This we know to be true. What is put into the stomach has a marked effect upon the brain; and a very large amount of the bad feelings arise from unhealthy food, overeating, fast eating, and eating too often. A little self-denial at the table affords continual comfort when away; while an abuse of the appetite produces constant bad feelings.

Let us all eat and drink to the glory of God. When we do this, we shall eat only what is for our health, at the right time, the right quantity, and not in haste. At the table is the time to let our moderation become known to all men.

"THE ALARM BELL."

Bro. C. Colegrove, Sardinia, N. Y., informs us that he intends "to publish as often as means and circumstances will justify, a pamphlet, or paper," with the above title. He says:

"It will maintain the unmistakable identity of Louis Napoleon as the personal antichrist and man of sin, the futurity of the abomination of desolation, the actual imminence of the most startling and important developments, and the speedy coming and kingdom of Christ. It will also favor the non-immortality of the soul, with its sequences, and the literal return of the Jews to Palestine, and the so-called 'age to come.' We dare not promise to issue numbers weekly or monthly, with the resources at our command, but with more or less frequency, as we have means and strength. We invite all who favor this suggestion to send such pecuniary aid as they can afford, and we will send in return copies of the publication.

We have written on some of these subjects before, as the readers of this notice know, and we desire to publish tracts or pamphlets frequently, and give a wide distribution. We may add our deep conviction of a rapidly advancing time of mighty changes, a time of commotion, a time of evil, a time of trouble, and the time of deliverance speedily to the waiting and watching people of God.

The first little issue will be ready at least as soon as this notice is inserted in the Crisis, and will be entitled, 'Current and Coming Events. What of Napoleon?'"

WHAT MR. DARBY SAYS.

In the "Hopes of the Church," published in England, by Mr. Darby, one of the leading men among the "Plymouth Brethren," Mr. Darby says:—

"We would express our conviction, that the idea of the immortality of the soul has no source in the gospel; that it comes, on the contrary, from the Platonists, and that it was just when the coming of Christ was denied in the church, or at least began to be lost sight of, that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul came in to replace that of the resurrection. This was the time of Origen. It is hardly needful to say that we do not doubt the immortality of the soul; we only assert that this doctrine has taken the place of the doctrine of the resurrection of the church, as the epoch of its joy and glory."

ORIGIN OF ANGELS.

There is a wide-spread impression among people of different churches, as well as among the spiritualists, that angels are simply the disembodied spirits of men. Several considerations indicate the fallacy of this claim.

1. It is destitute of Bible proof, being merely an assumption.

2. It is contradicted by Scripture, for man was made "a little lower than the angels"; hence, there were angels in existence before man was created, and long before human beings died.

3. The statement, "Ye shall be as gods," which was made before man's fall, intimates the existence of a race of intelligences previous to the time of man's creation; and Jehovah's remark, made after the fall, confirms this intimation: "Behold the man is become as one of us to know good and evil."—Gen. 3: 5, 22.

4. After man was driven out of the garden, the Lord "placed at the east of the garden of Eden cherubims" Gen. 3: 24. These "cherubims" were a species of angels, and they certainly existed before death cut down any of the human family, and consequently they could not have been disembodied spirits.

5. Job represents Jehovah as saying, "All the sons of God shouted for joy" at the creation of earth. Job 38: 7. A race of intelligences existed previous to man's creation, called "the sons of God," and elsewhere spoken of as "the gods whose dwelling is not with flesh" (Dan. 2: 11), and also styled "the holy gods." Dan. 5: 11. These same intelligences are now styled angels—"holy angels," and "evil angels," a part of them having "kept not their first estate."

As angels existed previous to the death of any man, it is but folly to claim that they are but spirit-men, or disembodied saints. Angels have often been mistaken for men, as they exist in the form of men, having bodies as really as men, though not formed out of such gross material. Daniel thus describes an angel: "His body was like the beryl, . . . like the similitude of the sons of men, . . . like the appearance of a man."—Dan. 10: 6, 16, 18. Thus an angel has a "body" and form like human beings, so that some "have entertained angels unawares."

But the Bible never teaches us that angels once dwelt in prisons of flesh, nor that human beings have embryo angels within them. This is all speculation. W. S.

IS HELL CONVERTED?

For centuries past, so called orthodox ministers and creeds all over the land have taught the existence of a literal hell of fire somewhere, though they could not tell where, in which wicked men would forever burn; the fire being fed either by immortal brimstone that would never burn up, or by having somebody constantly replenishing the fire. A few years ago Henry Ward Beecher, in a lecture, thus spoke:

"Hell is populated with the victims of harmless amusements. Will men never learn that the way to hell is through the valley of deceit? 'The wise man foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself, but fools pass on and are punished.' Startled for a moment, the victim pauses, gazes around upon the flowery scene, and whispers, 'Is it not harmless?' 'Yes, harmless,' responds a serpent from the grass! 'Harmless,' echoes the sighing wind! 'Harmless,' re-echo a hundred subtle tongues! If now God from heaven might only sweep the clouds away through which the victim gazes! O, if God would break that potent power which chains the blasts of hell, and let the sulphur stench roll up the vale, how would the vision change."

But to-day he forgets the "sulphur stench," and says:

"We are not to suppose that there is a hell—literally; a place of fire and brimstone. I don't believe it, and you don't believe it, and you ought not to believe it any more than you are to believe that heaven is really paved with golden paving stones."

There is a general swerving of late from the doctrine of literal hell fire. Has hell changed? or has "orthodoxy" changed? If it was wrong before, may it not be wrong now? When guilty conscience becomes hell, the crime becomes the penalty. W. S.

THE NEW-EARTH HOME OF THE SAINTS.

Peter expressed the opinion, contrary to the theology of the day, that we have a right to "look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." But at what point of time? Peter gives the answer: "The heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word, are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men, . . . in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also. . . Nevertheless, we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." The melting day, and "the perdition of ungodly men," must precede the "new earth," and Paul informs us when that perdition will overtake them: "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; [when?] when he shall come to be glorified in his saints." 2 Thess. 1: 6-10. This invalidates the claim that the "new earth" symbolizes the gospel age, and locates it after the punishment of the wicked, and after the burning day; and as "the perdition of ungodly men" and the burning day come together, and as Paul connects the punishment of the wicked with the Lord's coming, the conflagration is due at that epoch, after which earth will appear in its "new" form, freed from the curse, surrounded by new atmospheric heavens; for "as a vesture shalt thou change them, and they shall be changed." Ps. 102: 26.

In this conflagration, earth's unholy tenants will be consumed, this polluted globe be purged by fire, when it will come forth from its fiery baptism a fit habitation for immortal tenants. The Revelator thus describes the scene that comes after the coming of the great white throne, the judgment of the dead, and the casting of the wicked into the lake of fire:

"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away." Rev. 21: 1-4.

Thus, in the new earth, after "the former things are passed away," and death and pain are obliterated, Messiah—"God with us"—shall dwell with men, as their king: "Unto the Son he [the Father] saith, Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever; a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom." Heb. 1: 8. Thus at the coming of Christ "to execute judgment upon all" (Jude 15), and "to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity" (Isa 26: 21), while the saints are "caught up to meet the Lord," to remain "until the indignation be overpast." the "fire," that will effect the "perdition of ungodly men" will, also, melt the old earth; but it will emerge from this fiery deluge purified, renovated, and free from pollution—a "new earth," or renewed earth, surrounded by a new atmospheric heaven, free from poisonous elements that now fill our atmosphere, as the result of the curse. Delightful thought! Earth made "new," wearing its edenic robes, filled with deathless saints, basking eternally in the glory of God, under the reign of the "King of glory." Well may we pray, "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." May that happy world be our future home. W. S.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 24th, 1870, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. THANKSGIVING.

The annual New England custom of Thanksgiving dates back to 1621, after the first harvest had been gathered by the Pilgrim Fathers.

Many thoughts crowd into my mind on this subject, but I will put them all away, and give the one hundredth Psalm of David. It is beautifully applicable.

"Make a joyful noise unto the Lord, all ye lands.
Serve the Lord with gladness; come before his presence with singing.
Know ye that the Lord he is God; it is he that hath made us, and not we ourselves; we are his people, and the sheep of his pasture.
Enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise; be thankful unto him, and bless his name.
For the Lord is good, his mercy is everlasting; and his truth endureth to all generations."

A SLUMBERING CHURCH.

This may be considered by some a strange definition of the church in these days. There is so much agitation, so much stir, so much contending for the faith, that it would seem as if the church was wide awake. But is this really so? The waters of a superficial christianity may indeed be far wider than they were, but are they not at the same time far more shallow and run with less force?

What is the life of God's people in this world, what is their waiting for the coming of their Lord, but a slumbering and a sleeping? What are the things which are real to them, about which are their daily interests and fears and hopes, but the dreams of this state of time? Where are the realities of eternity? Where, but heard fitfully, as the sleeper hears the clock tolling the night hour, and turns him to slumber again? What is the most zealous, the most energetic of God's people but a slumberer and a sleeper, compared with that character of entire devotion to things unseen which should be his? How very far is the holiest saint who has ever adorned the church below, from the lowliest of the angels of God, who are proposed to us as our pattern in doing his will!

What minister of the gospel does not lose heart as he looks through his congregation seeking for helpers. He wants workers for the Sunday school, workers for the mission field in his parish, workers among the poor and needy. Many, through the blessing of the Lord upon his ministry, have been brought into the fold; but where are they? what are they doing for Christ? Since the hour of their consecration they have not done the first thing. They are of no manner of use to the Master. They are a positive hindrance. They are sleeping on their watch. Admirable plans are formed for a grand onslaught upon the enemy, but when and where they are most needed they are not to be found.

No such laggards will do for a day like this. We want young men and young women on fire with a holy zeal, to whom the service of Christ is a real service; the glory of God a real thing.—Christian at Work.

Correspondence.

From Bro. S. Ayres.

BRO. GRANT:—I have for some time thought that it might be encouraging to some to learn how the good Lord has blessed the people in Charlton—that once seemingly God-forsaken place, about half way between Charlton and Oxford, where the people had for years been without meetings and the means of grace, and many a family spending their Sabbaths hunting, fishing, and visiting; and, as some remarked, you could not on Sabbath morn see scarcely a team at the door ready to take the people to church, where now you see most every door-yard with a horse harnessed for some meeting. And why all this change? Simply because a few of God's chosen servants have been there with chart and compass in hand, to point out the way-marks upon the coast of time, showing that our destined port is just in sight; and while some hailed it with joy, and echoed and re-echoed the sound, others raved and flew around to find some champion able, as they hoped, to stop the work, but failed in the attempt; for it only added fuel to the flame, and waked up an interest in the people to know what these things meant.

Thus the work rolled on for one year, in the midst of all opposition, constantly gaining subjects and friends whom some of us little thought of, while at the same time our enemy succeeded in shutting us out of the school-house, which resulted in extra effort on the part of the lovers of truth, both there and abroad, to build an house unto the Lord, which was duly and very appropriately dedicated to his service by Bro. T. M. Preble; as it has proved, by the Lord's adding from time to time such as I trust will be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus, under the labors of quite a number of God's servants from abroad. They have had their trials in common with others, but still they can say the Lord has been good to Israel, and comforted his people, by giving them souls for their labor in the midst of sore trials.

We have had some of the most blessed seasons at the water, for the few weeks past, in burying some twelve happy subjects in the likeness of Christ's death and resurrection. The whole town seems to be stirred in view of such doings, and constrained to acknowledge that these things are marvelous in their eyes; and still the work goes on, backsliders are reclaimed, and sinners are being converted unto the Lord, and to God be all the glory.

I have had the pleasure of spending many Sabbaths since my first visit to that place in company with Bro. W. F. Higgins of this city, which was two years ago last February, since which time there has been quite a little church built up there, so that they now sustain and have in attendance the largest company of worshipers in town, as many testify. Truly the doings of the Lord are marvelous in our eyes. It is one of the highways and hedges into which God's servants may now enter to good profit; and may the good Lord of the harvest send forth more laborers to hunt lost sheep in the place.

I have found by experience that one great reason of success, if success we meet with, is because we hide ourselves behind the cross of Christ and present Christ to the people and not ourselves. Sometimes when I have felt the weakest, and thought I could hardly face the people again, I have found to my surprise that the most good has been done, and the minds most favorably impressed with truth. And if it was not for the Scriptures, which declare that God has "chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise," and "the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty," I never could stand in public to teach the things of God; but since it is declared by Paul that God has taken this course "to bring to nought things that are, that no flesh should glory in his presence," I still am encouraged. In the language of the poet, I dare to "Stand and tell

What beauties in my Savior dwell."

There is nothing like the present truth of the kingdom of God now at hand, to interest the people. I hardly dare to close any discourse without telling the congregation the Lord is soon coming, and giving them some reasons for it. I find that the people come to our meetings expecting to hear something about the things that we believe, and if they do not, strangers, at least, go away disappointed. But oh, for wisdom to know just how to present the truth, first to please the Lord, and then the people; for when God is well pleased, the people are blest and sinners are converted to him.

It now seems that God has set the nations to preaching that the time of trouble, of which Daniel speaks, is soon to come; and the people of the world and church are constrained to acknowledge that the things which we have long preached are now coming to pass. May God help us to be ready. S. AYRES.
Worcester, Sept. 26th.

From Bro. J. B. Wadsworth.

BRO. GRANT:—It has been some time since you have heard from me. I have not been very well the past summer; but have been here in Memphis ever since the mission closed. Thinking the friends of the mission would like to hear from this little flock, I write to let them know how they are getting along. I suppose you have heard that the chapel has passed over into the hands of the colored African Methodists. Supposing they were favorable to the blessed hope, I went to hear for myself; but I found them in darkness in relation to some very important truths. I then felt that I could not advise this people to unite with them, for that would be going from light to darkness; but they needed no caution or advice from me in this respect, for they were not satisfied with the preaching. The contrast was so great, they prize the light they received from the northern teachers more than ever before. They cannot unite with them, as there is no sympathy between them. Though they have been slandered for their love of the word of God, and their faith, they have shown the spirit of Christ to their opposers.

I feel very sorry for this little flock, for they seem almost broken-hearted, having no place to worship; but they still meet in their houses, and try to comfort each other with prayer and exhortation. They are trying to keep together until they can get means to build a house. They are praying earnestly that the Lord will send them a good pastor, and all are in favor of Bro. Leslie, and hope he will show his face in Memphis once more. The present pastor is not able to preach, for he is out of health most of the time. The seed of truth sown here will not be lost, for when the reapers come to gather in the Lord's harvest, they will find some sheaves to gather into his garner from this wicked city.

The white people are now beginning to manifest an interest in this truth. Many who have investigated it say we have the word of God. A lady living near us, having recently learned our views, said she was really glad to find some one to sympathize with her. She had formerly been a member of the Campbellite church, but in searching the word of God she found the doctrine of going to heaven at death was contrary to the Bible, so she left her church and has been believing the truth by herself until now. We have lent her papers and books, and she likes them much, and is desiring that some of our preachers would come and give the light to our white people. She has also expressed a wish to be immersed by some one of our faith. Yours in love,
JOHN B. WADSWORTH.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. L. BOUTELL writes from South Deering, N. H.:—"I am now in the mission field, not South, but up here among the hills, in answer, I thought, to the 'Macedonian cry.' It is a new place for our faith, only one family fully with us, a few more within six or eight miles. I commenced meeting Sunday, the 13th, and shall stay till after the 20th. Meeting every evening. The people are scattering, but they come out as much as might be expected, to hear the word preached. We have the hearing ear, and hope much good may result from the meeting. O what apostate times we live in! Let us do all we can by the word and Spirit of God to break the spell, and make our way as much as possible in new places."

BRO. C. C. MARSTON writes from Lanark, Ill.:—"The Crisis is a welcome messenger in my family. It is indeed a worthy and able exponent of "present truth." I should be lost without it, though it has only been a few weeks since I became a regular reader. One prominent feature that I have noticed, is indeed very commendable and highly appreciated by me; that is, your explanation of texts that appear to conflict with our views. This I think is very advantageous, especially to such as are not fully decided. It has only been a short time since I embraced the truth as it is in Jesus. Thank God for the light. Jesus and the resurrection is our only hope.

If there be no resurrection, then the dead in Christ are perished. What could be plainer? Through Jesus we receive as a gift from God eternal life; if we refuse to accept this gift, we must suffer the penalty of sin, which is death. So says the word of God. Rom. 6: 23. May God's choicest blessings rest upon the Crisis and the holy cause it so ably represents. I shall do my utmost to extend its circulation wherever I go."

Bro. J. Daley writes from Baltimore, Md., Oct. 16th, 1870:—"I still thank God and take courage. I have had an interview with my pastor. He sent for me. I thought I should have an opportunity of convincing him of his error; but, to my surprise, he would not talk about it; but told me there were M. E. preachers that entertained my views, but did not preach them. I think there is a good opportunity for one of your preachers to come on, but it is useless to come for one day, and that day the Sabbath. As a general thing, they go to their churches on that day. Come and stay one or two weeks. Most of us are poor, but I think we can give the preacher enough to eat, and pay the expenses of the hall.

I told a brother that I would not join any M. E. church only as a materialist. He told Bro. Price this, and he said, 'I will take him in my church.' This is the same brother that said he was sorry for me; but now says my belief does not interfere with my being a good man. A great change has come over the church within two years; but there will be a greater change before long. Come and help us.

Two years ago I had a rough time of it; but now, bless God, they all take me by the hand. Then I was 'crazy'; but now they all want me to come to their church."

Bro. W. Churchill writes:—"The little church at Brunswick, Eau Claire Co., Wis., are still holding on to the hope of soon seeing Him of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write. We have prayer meetings every Lord's day morning, and Sabbath school and Bible class afterwards. We have Wednesday evening prayer meetings, which are seasons of refreshing from the Lord. Our hearts burn within us while we speak of God's love, and we lift up our heads and rejoice, knowing that our redemption draweth nigh, and that soon earth will bloom again, and man be restored to his lost estate."

Bro. J. Kellogg writes from Addison, Vt.; "It may be interesting to you to know something about us here in Vermont. The good Lord is at work in Addison, Ferrisburgh, and vicinity. He has heard prayer, and has sent two of his servants to labor with and for us; Bro. L. C. and Sr. McKinstry. God is blessing their labors. Bro. M. led four willing souls down into the liquid grave last week, in Ferrisburgh, and I think more will soon follow. Pray for us."

Bro. J. T. Ongley writes:—"The good Lord is on the giving hand. The truth is taking hold on the hearts of the people where we have been laboring in Rouseville and Pittsburg, Pa. Pray for us."

SCRAPS AND ITEMS.

It is sometimes foolishly objected to the doctrine of a universal resurrection of the dead, that the earth would not furnish standing-room for the immense congregation. Now, we do not believe that it is the doctrine of the Scriptures, that all people who have ever lived will rise again at one and the same time. Some have been raised already, and there will be others raised before the final resurrection. But even supposing that all should be raised simultaneously, and all stationed on the earth to meet their Judge, the utter groundlessness and absurdity of the objection which unbelief seeks to interpose can easily be demonstrated.

Take the present population of the globe at its most reasonable estimate of one thousand millions. Supposing it to be, then, some six thousand years (according to the common reckoning) since the creation of Adam, and taking thirty years as a generation, we shall have two hundred generations since Adam. If we further suppose, for the sake of simplifying our calculation, though in reality the supposition is a most extravagant one, that the population of the world has been the same as it now is ever since the end of the first generation, then one thousand millions multiplied by two hundred, will give two hundred thousand millions as the aggregate number of the human race who have come into existence up to the present time. Now according to the Gazetteer, England (exclusive of Wales) contains in round numbers 32,600,000 statute acres, each acre containing 4840 square yards; 32,600,000 multipled by 4840 gives us 157,784,000,000 square yards. Each square yard again will afford ample standing-room for four persons; 157,784,000,000 again multiplied by 4, gives us 631,136,000,000 as the number of persons England, excluding Wales, would accommodate. But, as we have seen, the total number of the human race at the end of six thousand years cannot exceed 200,000,000,000; and consequently we arrive at the, to some persons, somewhat startling conclusion, that less than one-third of the area of the little island of England would afford standing-room for every individual of the human race who has ever existed.—Prophetic Times.

Obituaries.

Andrus. Died, in Christ, at Sturgen, Ind., Nov. 9th, 1870, Eugene E., son of I. E. and E. A. Andrus, aged twelve years and six months.

Eugene, though young, had been well instructed by his parents relative to the things of the kingdom of God. He seemed to have a true knowledge of death, and of the promised deliverance therefrom at the coming of Jesus, whom he loved. He was exceedingly anxious to be baptized, which service, for lack of the desired administrator, was delayed till the day previous to his death, when the church was called together, and he was buried with Christ by baptism by his father, who is Elder of the church. This service being performed, he had great peace of mind until the hour of his death, when he bade all his friends farewell, and fell asleep. Words of comfort were spoken by Bro. James Nafe, from 1 Thess. 4: 13-18. E. C. Andrus.

Miller. Died, in South Adams, Mass., Nov. 6th, 1870, Frankie J., only child of James V. and Hannah R. Miller, aged two years and seven months.

To the heart-broken parents, and numerous relatives and friends, who gathered at the funeral, words of comfort were spoken by the writer, from Psa. 30: 5,—"Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." Elizabeth Warren.

Pullis. Died, of croup, in Bridgeport, Conn., Oct. 27th, 1870, Clarence E., son of Conrad and Jane L. Pullis, and grandson of Sr. P. A. Strong, aged two years and nine months.

He was a lovely child. None could see him but to love him. Words of comfort were spoken by H. K. Walling. J. F. Walling.

Clark. Died, in North Adams, Mass., July 21st, 1870, Avery A., son of Jerome and Sophia Clark, aged six months.

Words of consolation were addressed by the writer to the weeping parents and children, and the many friends gathered at the funeral, from Jer. 31: 16. Elizabeth Warren.

— It is beyond question that they who cheerfully suffer most for Christ, share also the richest blessings of his grace.

Cable News.

[Special to N. Y. World.]—Agitation concerning Russia's designs are on the increase. In the best informed cities it is believed there is imminent danger of a general European conflict.

The Pall Mall Gazette to-night declares that the ministers do not merely lack true vision, but are occupied with the exclusion of truth with misleading dreams.

Two dangers confront England; the Alabama difficulty and the eastern question. The circumstance that lifted the latter to the great and immediate importance made the former more formidable because of increasing probability of there being a combination. Russia declares her design to grasp Turkey, and Prussia is ready to connive and even aid her. England is the only power to whom Turkey can look and she is threatened with annihilation if she lifts a finger.

The London Times correspondent writing from Tours says the moral effect of the victory near Orleans is incalculable. Reinforcements have gone forward to Gen. Palladines, who now has a large and effective army.

Gambetta has returned to Tours from the army. He has expressed his entire satisfaction with the affairs at Orleans.

The announced intention of Russia to break from former treaties causes a mutual distrust throughout Europe and alarm in Austria and England. The Russian designs are more particularly toward Austria. The secret treaty between Russia and Prussia will prevent the interference of Russia in the French war. A defensive alliance between Austria and England is probable.

Vienna, Nov. 15. Gortschakoff's note causes great excitement in political circles. Count Von Beust will take immediate and serious diplomatic steps. An alliance between England, Austria, Italy and Turkey is seriously contemplated by Count Von Beust and Count Andrassy.

Brussels, Nov. 16. The Independence Belge of this morning has a telegram from Vienna, dated last evening, announcing that England, Turkey, Austria and Italy have agreed to preserve a common attitude toward Russia, and that a collective note to that effect is preparing at Vienna. The threatening attitude of Russia causes a panic in the money circles in that city.

Florence, Nov. 16. Russia's repudiation of the Paris treaty of 1856 causes intense anxiety here.

London, Nov. 16. Stocks and securities of all kinds are lower this morning and the markets are flat in view of the crisis on the Eastern question. There is much uneasiness in all circles. The question of an alliance between England, Austria, Italy and Turkey is discussed on all hands. The Times in its editorial remarks on the subject bespeaks disgust and indignation for the Russian circular.

Amsterdam, Nov. 16. The Handelsblad this morning publishes a London telegram to the effect that a British fleet is preparing, and that its object has been announced at Vienna and Florence. The same paper says that the Sultan was not consulted by Russia touching the contemplated revision of the Paris treaty of 1856, but was advised that Russia had demanded it.

London, Nov. 15. [Special to the New York Herald.] A Herald correspondent writes from Versailles the 11th: A general sortie from Paris is expected about the 18th or 20th, and the preparations to resist an attack are vigorously pressed forward.

London, Nov. 15. [Special to the New York World.] The World correspondent at Dole says that Dijon has been recaptured by the French, who, after a brilliant engagement, drove the Prussians from the city. The Prussians are retreating northeast, along the road leading through the towns of Mareabeau and Gera.

The French Situation.

The World correspondent at Versailles on the 11th, says that Moltke said yesterday; Paris will be able to hold out four weeks longer. I deplore the folly of the French in refusing to yield, and the necessity of devastating the country.

The opinion of the army concerning the entry of Paris coincides with that of Moltke. The men, however, are terribly anxious to get home. They don't care about seeing Paris now. The belief prevails among the officers that as soon as Paris is occupied a majority of the troops will be quartered in the city and there remain all winter, superintending the Constituent Assembly and keeping a wide circle of country under subjection, while the army of Prince Frederick Charles pacifies the rest of the country until the army lately under Bazaine can be brought back to France to be used in strengthening the hands of a new and strong government with which peace will be made. At the head of this government will be Napoleon. This is the reason why Bazaine has been sent to Wilhelmshohe, and of the continual communication between Napoleon, the King, Bismarck, and the imperialists of England and Belgium.

The Roman Quirinal Entered.

London, Nov. 15. A dispatch from Florence says that a forcible entrance to the Quirinal has been effected. The Papal commander, on being asked for the keys to the palace, said he had consigned them to Antonelli, who said he had given them to the Pope. No one ventured to ask the Pope for them, but a locksmith was employed to pick the locks, when the palace was entered. An inventory was taken of all the contents. An immense collection of Papal archives were seized, comprising the archives of music, ecclesiastics, affairs of council, affairs of master ceremonies chauntres, affairs and principes, Latin letters and affairs of the Secretary of State.

The seizure of the palace has called forth severe comments from a part of the clerical journals, and these all have been seized and confiscated.

The expulsion of priests engaged in teaching continues every day. No further pretence is made of recognizing any rights of the Pope or Church.

A report is current here that Von Moltke is seriously ill at Chateau Arenberg, in Canton.

A New Residence for Napoleon.

Thurgovia is being prepared for a residence for Napoleon. Large quantities of baggage have arrived at the Chateau, and the Empress is expected.

Secret Movements of the Russians.

A letter from Warsaw, dated the 8th, says that the reserves of the Russian army have for some time past been secretly called in. The command was not given in the usual manner, but secretly to the chiefs of districts. The army contracts for breadstuffs are twice as large for 1871 as for the last year. The manufacture of arms in all the foundries is proceeding with uninterrupted energy, and the fleet is being constantly exercised in the use of the new cannon at Cronstadt.

London, Nov. 16. The whole London press to-morrow morning will open the cry against Russia, appealing to the Government to declare war if she persists in her demands. The feeling in the city is intense, and the excitement is almost unprecedented. The Government finds itself pressed forward to an attitude which it had not designed at first to assume. This feeling is so strong that the Government is convinced that it is unsafe to resist it. Granville's reply to Gortschakoff's circular is temperate in tone, but firm, declaring that the persistence of Russia in her demands must end in war.

In the meanwhile extraordinary activity prevails at the Admiralty. Orders have been given to man, arm and prepare the entire fleet. The work is to go on day and night at Portsmouth, Devonport, Spithead and Sheerness.

Private letters from Versailles say that the position of the Germans is becoming extremely critical, and alarm prevails among all who understand the situation. The King would return immediately to Berlin, but it was not considered safe to permit him to depart without a very large escort, which could not be spared, as he would be captured or shot by the Franc-Tireurs, who are swarming all over the country.

So great are Moltke's apprehensions of the consequences of attacks by the force of Trochu and a simultaneous assault on the part of the Army of the Loire, that intrenchments are now being thrown up in the rear and flanks of the German position. Officers in high rank at Versailles declare that the Germans find themselves besieged, and other letters state that a transformation in the scene has occurred.

The French Jubilant.

The French people are changing depression and fear into confidence and bravery. Immense supplies of Snider rifles and Armstrong guns are in their hands, and the numbers of their armies are constantly increasing. In short, everything is promising the complete turning of the tables, and the utter annihilation of the invaders.

Austria Ready to take the Field.

London, Nov. 16. The Cologne Gazette of the 15th, says that Von Beust, after an interview with the Russian Ambassador at Vienna, stated to Lord Bloomfield that Russia had nearly 100,000 troops near the Turkish frontier, and Austria was perfectly prepared to take the field, if England would give her consent.

At a Cabinet Council, to-day, it was resolved to act decisively in regard to the Russian complications [illegible]

Great is the popular indignation which [illegible] against Russia.

There has been great excitement, but no panic to-day on the Exchanges. [illegible] has been so long expected that the public were partly prepared for it. It is the form and peremptoriness of Russia's declaration which have created surprise, rather than the demand itself.

Movements of the French.

The World's correspondent at Tours sends the following: General De Paladines has ordered a corps of 25,000 men to advance from Lemousalony railway to Chartres and then move southeast to Toury, effecting a junction there with the left wing of the main body of the army.

London, Nov. 16. War preparations are being conducted on a large scale. The fortress of Gibraltar is is being revictualed. A portion of the British fleet in the English Channel has been ordered to the Mediterranean to reinforce the English war vessels already stationed there.

A dispatch from Tours, to-day, stating that Dijon had been recaptured by the French, was a mistake. Later advices announce that the town of Dreux, twenty miles north of Cartres, in the department of Eure et Loire, has been recaptured by the French.

The Duke of Aosta Chosen King of Spain.

Madrid, Nov. 17. The Cortes have elected the Duke of Aosta King of Spain by a vote of 191 against 120. Madrid is animated but no disorder is reported.

The Crisis in England.

London, Nov. 17. There is much excitement at the Stock Exchange, and securities of all kinds are declining. Breadstuffs are advancing correspondingly. The crisis forms a theme of newspaper comments, and there seems to be but one opinion of the Russian demand that it is insolent in the last degree. The journals on the continent take no pains to disguise their satisfaction that Great Britain and her colonies would suffer more severely in case of a war against Russia than France has suffered in her contest with Prussia. All the great powers of Europe are ready to reconsider the Paris treaty of 1856.

The Treaty Question.

London, Nov. 17. The idea of a collective note from the powers concerned to Russia, has been abandoned. The Austrian dispatch in reply to Gortschakoff, however, is identical with that of Great Britain.

The evening papers concur in urging vigorous war measures.

The merchants here decline to charter Russian vessels.

Turkey is preparing for a desperate conflict.

The English Feeling in Regard to France.

The Post to-day says: "The cause of France has now become the cause of Europe. All of the neutral States are bound to assist her to obtain her peace and have her intact, or aid her to continue the war in order to hold Prussia engaged, while England, Austria, Italy and Turkey whip Russia into submission. Either Prussia must sign an easy peace to liberate her forces, or France, detaining them, will show herself once more the savior of Europe."

A dispatch from Tours to-day says that numerous reports reach that city that Trochu, on the 15th, made a magnificent sortie, inflicting a terrible loss on the Germans, and establishing communication with Gen. De Paladines. The details of the fighting are very incomplete, but the substance of the report is that the main attack was made along the roads leading through St. Cloud, Sevres and Versailles, while feints were made toward the north at St. Denis and south at Villijuif.

London, Nov. 21. The war feeling is ardent throughout the Russian Empire.

Constantinople, Nov. 21. The Levant Herald in its issue of to-day, says that the Sultan of Turkey has sent a messenger to the Khedive of Egypt, requiring his presence at Constantinople.

Tours, Nov. 21. It is reported here that Napoleon has written to members of the provisional government, urging continued resistance to any proposition for the cession of French territory.

A Protest from Cardinal Antonelli.

London, Nov. 17. The World's correspondent, from Florence on the 14th inst., says: "Antonelli has addressed a strong protest to the Powers against the forcible occupation of the Quirinal. He says although the Pope was prepared for spoliations of various descriptions, he did not expect his personal property to be confiscated. The Cardinal recapitulates the events attending the forcible entrance of the Quirinal, which, in common with other places, has always been considered the private property of the Popes, maintained from their private purses. The Pontiff remonstrates against this sacrilegious spoliation, which completes the frightful series of outrages on the Holy See. Should Victor Emanuel enter Rome, the Pope will depart for Malta."

The European crisis has come—the recent French successes indicating that a turning point may have been reached and the stupendous tide of Prussian victories arrested. The hopes and fears of Europe recognize the hour of opportunity or peril to have come. Russia with a startling movement sweeps her hand across the chess-board of diplomacy, Austria, Turkey and Italy spring up in alarm, England trembles on the verge of hostile movement; old issues which have slept or smouldered for years burst up with volcanic fierceness. A few days will decide whether they are to be suppressed or to wrap all Europe in a conflagation of mightiest war.—Daily News.

Cork, Nov. 15. A great demonstration of sympathy for the Pope was made here to-night. An immense meeting was held, which was presided over by the Bishop of the Diocese, and was addressed by members of Parliament.

Resolutions expressing personal sympathy for the Holy Father, lamenting the obstruction of his temporal power as detrimental to peace in Europe, and the favor of memoralizing Her Majesty's Government on the subject, were adopted.

In Brief.

☞ A monster gun of thirty-five tons is being cast in Woolwich, England. It will be rifled with nine grooves, and the ordinary cartridge will contain eighty pounds of powder.

☞ Rumors are afloat of a secret understanding between Russia and the Khedive looking to the independence of Egypt.

☞ A fiery volcano of large proportions has suddenly appeared in the interior of Mexico.

☞ The English dissenting churches far outnumber those of the establishment, but the latter numbers the mass of the nobility and wealthy among its communicants.

☞ "A lawyer," said Daniel Webster, "could never hope to gain his cause if he had to plead it boxed up in a pulpit."

☞ As an evidence of the dryness of the past summer, Conductor Taft, of the Providence and Worcester express train, reports that for five consecutive months his cars were not wet by rain.

☞ The chair in which Napoleon sat while arranging (or rather assenting to) the terms of his capitulation with King William at Sedan, is likely to become an historical relic. He had no sooner risen from it than a Berlin police officer, on duty at the Prussian headquarters, laid hands upon it, at the same time giving the servant who had charge of the room a twenty franc piece. It may yet sell for its weight in gold, as it is probably the most interesting Sedan chair in existence.

A Mammoth Inundation—Fifty Thousand Persons Rendered Homeless.—Donnai, Nov. 12. [Special to the New York Herald.] A mammoth inundation of the surrounding country commenced yesterday. For four miles is one broad lake, ruining the village of Lambros, which is entirely deserted. Five hundred families were driven away by the flood. Windows and doors of houses are walled up to keep out the waters. The zone of the inundation is eleven miles wide, and completely encircles Donnai. Over fifty thousand persons will be made homeless when the inundations are completed.

A General European War.—When speaking of the political aspect in Europe, the New York Herald of Nov. 16th says:—

"In view of a probable embroilment of all Europe in a war to arise out of the complications connected with the present war and the strategic movements and ambition of Russia in the East, important considerations are involved with reference to the result to us, in a commercial point of view, of the terrific struggle which would ensue. With a grand alliance between England, France, Austria, Turkey and Italy, against Prussia and Russia, it is not difficult to see that the war would destroy the enterprises of the Old World and drive every European vessel from the sea."

☞ A christian sailor, when asked why he remained so calm in a fearful storm, said, "Though I sink, I shall only drop into the hollow of my Father's hand; for he holds all these waters there."

☞ Horace Greeley says that the darkest day in any man's earthly career is that wherein he fancies there is some easier way of gaining a dollar than by squarely earning it.

For the World's Crisis.

"DEPART, YE CURSED."

"Depart!" Did I hear him say it—
The Savior—that fearful word?
And must I indeed obey it?
Say, was it "depart" I heard?
Too late to become forgiven?
Too late to receive his grace?
Shut out of his house from heaven,
And away from the Father's face?

Ah! yes, 'tis too well I know it,
My sentence is right and just;
To none but myself I owe it,
The loss of eternal rest.
O, why did I waste in pleasure
The days of the grace of God,
Or barter for earthly treasure
My soul's everlasting good?

I knew I must seek the Savior,
I knew the good way of life,
And that for my own behavior
I should meet him with joy or grief.
I meant to have shared his blessing,
To have his dear name confessed,
And his love and his grace possessing,
To have entered his people's rest.

I knew there'd be many lost ones,
That the Lord's was a little flock,
And I meant to be one of the blest ones
Hid safe in the sheltering Rock.
But the grace I so long neglected
Will nevermore plead for me,
And the Christ I so oft rejected,
For once is rejecting me.

S. Wilbraham, Mass. LUCY MORRIS CHAFFEE.

SONSHIP AND FELLOWSHIP.

"The fellowship of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord."
1 Cor. 1: 9.

God's faithfulness is our resting-place. His true and unchanging love is our security. From first to last it is with a "faithful" God that we have to do. The eternal God is our refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms. There is none like the God of Jeshurun,—the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness nor shadow of turning.

It is this faithful God who calls us; saves us; blesses us; keeps us. It is he who begins the good work in us, and will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ. He will keep what we have committed to him.

This calling of his is often referred to. That which he calls us out of is noted: "Who hath called you out of darkness."—1 Peter 2: 9. That to which he calls us is also noted; "Called unto liberty" (Gal. 5: 13); "called to glory" (2 Peter 1: 3); "called you unto his kingdom and glory."—1 Thess. 2: 12. That by which he calls us is also noted. "Called by grace" (Gal. 1: 15): "called by our gospel."—2 Thess. 2: 14. But in the passage before us, it is simply said that we are called into the fellowship of his Son. What does this mean?

Fellowship does not merely mean friendship, or converse, or sympathy; it means "partnership," sharing what belongs to others, —"all that I have is thine." Thus the word is used in Luke 5: 10, "which were partners with Simon." There is not merely partaking of something as a gift, but sharing, as common property, what another possesses. It is business partnership; family partnership; filial partnership; conjugal partnership; the partnership of adoption or heritage. Our text embraces all these when it speaks of our being called to the fellowship of his Son Jesus Christ; just as elsewhere it is said that we "are made partakers of Christ." —Heb. 3: 14. So that intercourse with Christ is only part of the boundless privilege which fellowship implies.

Let us consider this fellowship or partnership with Christ in the following aspects:—

I. Partnership with him in what he was. He was crucified, he died, was buried, rose again. In all this we have part. Not that we helped him to do his work and to bear his cross; not that we were joint sin-bearers, assisting him to save us. In all this he was alone, suffering the wrath alone. But still we are said to be crucified with him, to have died with him, to be buried with him, to have risen with him. One cross, one death, one grave, one resurrection. Such is our fellowship with him, that God looks on us as one with him in all these things; treats us as having passed through what he did, as if we had actually paid the eternal penalty, and were entitled to the eternal righteousness. In believing we enter on this partnership, and into all the benefits of his death and resurrection. As one with him, all these are ours.

II. Partnership with him in what he is. He has not only risen, but he has ascended; he has been seated on the throne of the Majesty in the heavens. We share his present dignity; for we are said to be seated with him in heavenly places, and are treated by God as such. His ascension is ours; his dignity and glory are ours. We are still, no doubt, here on earth; but we are called to feel, and act, and live as those who are already at the right hand of God. Simple forgiveness is not all our portion. We are raised higher than this; raised into high favor with God, and made to share in the fullness which belongs to Christ as the risen and ascended and glorified Son of man. Besides all this, we share his name, and are called sons of God. We share the Father's love,—"that the love wherewith thou hast loved me may be in them." We share his offices; we are prophets, priests, and kings; heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ Jesus.

III. Partnership with him in what he shall be. Much of his glory is yet in reserve; for now we see not yet all things put under him. The day of glory and dominion; the day of the crown, and the throne, and the royal robe is coming; and in all these we are to have fellowship with him; as one with him; members of his body, sharing the glory of the head; as the bride of Christ, sharing the glory of the Bridegroom; one with him in all his honor throughout eternity.

Thus, then, there is complete fellowship with Christ. It is to this that we are called by a faithful God; and is it not a high and glorious calling? Fellowship in his cross, his grave, his resurrection, his throne, his glory! All this faith secures to us; and of all this the Holy Spirit bears witness to us. Believing, we are reconciled, saved, accepted, blessed with all spiritual blessings in Christ Jesus.

Let us walk worthy of it; as men who really believe it; happy, holy, unworldly, zealous, generous, loving. Let us carry the consciousness of our calling into everything, great or small; into business, daily life, recreations, reading, education, every thing; maintaining our true position before men; manifesting our proper character; letting the world know our prospects, and doing nothing inconsistent with what we profess to be now, and with what we shall be when the Lord comes. —Bonar on the Acts and Epistles.

— A firm faith is the best theology; a good life the best philosophy; a clear conscience the best law; honesty the best policy; and temperance the best physic.

For the World's Crisis.

HOW TO ENCOURAGE YOUNG PREACHERS.

I noticed in a late number of the Crisis a short article entitled, "Encourage Young Preachers." Being one of that class, my attention was attracted to it; and with Bro. Grant's permission I would like to consider the question.

In the first place I will try and answer the question negatively, and show a few ways in which they ought not to be encouraged.

1. When they are successful in their humble efforts, do not be envious towards them. Young men get too much of this kind of encouragement, and there are enough standing ready to give it. They do not need it, and can get along quite well without it.

2. When they make good progress in preaching, and commendable improvement in public speaking, do not be jealous of them. It is natural for old men to think that they can do better than young men, and to feel a little chagrined when they are equaled or surpassed by those who are inferior in age; but do not be jealous. Jealousy is as cruel as the grave. Then keep it back.

3. When they try to do the Master's will, and follow the leadings of the Spirit, do not accuse them of trying "to show off" or "to display their talents." Always remember that we are not all alike, and that we do not all talk alike, look alike, or act alike; and that which would be "showing off" in one, would be quite natural in another; and that which would be a "display of talents" in you, would be the outgushing of some other heart. Do not accuse them with "putting on airs." Always stop to think that while some are by nature "rough and ready," others who are perhaps just as good are calm and easy, quiet and still, free and courteous, polite and pleasing. What if you do dislike their ways? They may dislike your ways just as much. And if their ways are "peculiar," so have the ways of some of our most able men been peculiar, and in some cases very peculiar. Then judge in charity, and do not give this kind of encouragement.

4. When young men speak with the lips that which God indites in the soul; or when out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh; or when they seem to have a good flow of words; or when they advance good and substantial arguments; do not accuse them with preaching other men's sermons, or with committing other men's thoughts to memory and rehearsing them from the public stand as a school-boy rehearses his committed declamation. Because "a boy is a boy," is not positive evidence that he is utterly destitute of knowledge; and if he happens to preach a good sermon, it may be that some one else did not write it; it may be, by a possibility, that it was quite original with himself, and that it is his own production. Then do not give him this poor and meagre encouragement.

Young men, and young women too, have enough to surmount without these things being added. Do not impugn or misrepresent their motives.

Now let us turn to the other side, and answer the question in the affirmative, and give some of the ways in which young preachers ought to be encouraged.

1. Introduce them into the field of labor. Give out appointments, and take them along with you to help fill them. And even before they break the fetters that bind them, go to them and talk with them on the subject. Tell them your own past experience, and advise them to do their whole duty. If they make any excuses (and of course they will), meet them. If they bring up objections, take them out of the way, and let them see a clear and free course in which to run.

2. Give them good, healthy, and strengthening advice and counsel. Advise and counsel them where to go, what subjects to take, and how to handle them; but do not think of trying to dictate them in regard to their work or the field of action. If they make a mistake, go to them and tell them of it, and, if they are what they ought to be, they will thank you. If they are in the dark, give them the light (if you are in possession of it), and, if they are true men or women, they will receive it from you kindly.

3. Give them christian, brotherly reproof and discipline. Just because a young person is a public laborer or a preacher, it does not make them infallible, or divine. They are still human; therefore sinful and erring. If you see them rash or imprudent, hasty or impetuous; if you see them in the wrong or in the dark, erring or going astray, go to them in a kind and loving way, and try to restore them in the spirit of meekness, and win them (of all others) to the standard of patience, purity, and true religion.

Go to him and tell him of his faults. Tell him plainly and in a good spirit, and he will listen to you. But be sure and tell him, and not some one else; for a stab in the dark will do him a great and, it may be, irreparable injury. Let him understand your real meaning, and he will love you for it.

4. Give them words of comfort and cheer, of courage and faith. Who knows how potent a little word is when spoken at the right time, in the right place, and for the right purpose? Words carry a powerful influence with them, and it costs but a little to speak. Do not let a poor brother droop and die for the want of them. Does he in one of his first efforts make a failure? Then tell him not to be disheartened; others have done the same and still succeeded and made their mark in the world. Does he think his efforts are fruitless? Let them do you good, and tell him of it; let them cheer your soul, and let him know it. Is he almost ready to stop and give up? Tell him to go forward, and bid him a hearty God-speed in his work of love. Is he sinking beneath the waters of the sea of trial? Then reach out a helping hand and help him to rise, and then help him after he is on his feet to stand.

Do not praise, but cheer. Do not flatter, but encourage. And, above all, pray for them. They need your earnest prayers. O, let them be given, and that freely.

Young men who expect to succeed must stand for themselves. After having stood the storm and fought the battle once, they can do it again in God's strength.

"Dare to be right, dare to be true;
Cowards and bigots dread every thing new;
If you cannot stand at your post in a storm,
How can you fight in the ranks of reform?"

May God bless all young men and women who are trying to preach the gospel, and bring them with their sheaves into his glorious garner. E. S. MOULTON.

THE TWENTY-THIRD PSALM.

David has left no sweeter psalm than the short twenty-third. It is but a moment's opening of his soul; but as when one walking the winter street sees the door opened for some one to enter, and the red light streams a moment forth, and the forms of gay children are running to greet the comer, and genial music sounds, though the door shuts and leaves the night black, yet it can not shut back again all that the eye, the ear, the heart and the imagination have seen. So in this psalm, though it is but a moment's opening of the soul, are emitted truths of peace and consolation that will never be absent from the world.

The twenty-third psalm is the nightingale of the psalms. It is small, of a homely feather, singing shyly out of obscurity; but oh, it has filled the air of the whole world with melodious joy greater than the heart can conceive. Blessed be the day on which the psalm was born.

What would you say of a pilgrim commissioned of God to travel up and down the earth singing a strange melody, which, when one heard, caused him to forget whatever sorrow he had? And so the singing angel goes on his way through all lands, singing in the language of every nation, driving away trouble by the pulses of the air which his tongue moves by the divine power; behold just such a one! This pilgrim God has sent to speak in every language on the globe. It has charmed more grief to rest than all the philosophy of the world. It has remanded to their dungeon more felon thoughts, more black doubts, more thriving sorrows, than there are sands on the sea-shore. It has comforted the noble host of the poor. It has poured balm and consolation into the heart of the sick, of captives in dungeons, of widows in their pinching griefs, of orphans in their loneliness.

Ghostly hospitals have been illumined by it. It has visited the prisoner and broken his chains, and, like Peter's angel, led him forth in imagination and sung him back to his home again. It has made the dying christian slave freer than his master; consoled those whom, dying, he left behind mourning, not so much that he has gone as because they were left behind and could not go too. Nor is its work done. It will go singing to your children and mine, and to their children through all the generations of time; nor will it fold its wings till the last pilgrim is safe, and time is ended; and then it shall fly back to the bosom of God, whence it issued, and sound on, mingled with all those sounds of celestial joy which make heaven musical forever.—Life Thoughts.

For the World's Crisis.

I'LL MEET MY LOVED ONES THERE.

What though the world looks drearily,
Since death took thee away?
What though my steps go wearily
Through all the long, long day?
There'll be a home where tears are dry,
Where is no thought of care;
How sweet the consolation is—
I'll meet my loved one there.

This is my solace while alone,
That we again shall meet,
Where all the faithful to the end
In joy each other greet.
Shall I not know thee in that land?
Ah! yes, my hopes declare;
Together we shall tread its fields—
I'll meet my loved one there.

THE CROSS.

REASONS FOR WEARING ONE.

There are some who wear a cross who would scarcely be willing to admit that they regard it as a mere toy or ornament.

Perhaps they say that they wear it as a memento of Him who was crucified for our offences. It is, indeed, a precious truth that he bore our sins on his own body on the tree. "The cup which my Father hath given me," he said, "shall I not drink it?" And he drank it to the very dregs, so that no drop of wrath can ever mingle in any cup which is put into the believer's hand. On the contrary, he has given to us a cup of blessing, an overflowing cup. What love unspeakable! How full, how free!

But the cross deals not only with my sins, but with myself. God not only laid on Jesus all our sins, but he judged, in the person of his Son on the tree, our old selves, that old nature of which we were all partakers. God has condemned this on the cross, as the apostle testifies—"Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with Christ," and "They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts." Would you know what sin is? You cannot learn it in yourself; for at best you will get there the imperfect estimate of a heart deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked. You can learn it only on the cross, which is God's estimate of it. We see the exceeding sinfulness of sin when we see that nothing but the shedding of the precious blood of God's own Son could put it away.

But if the old man is thus disposed of, we need a new self, and this is what we possess in a risen and ascended Christ; not the old man repaired, but "if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature, old things are passed away; behold all things are become new, and all things are of God." God has quickened and raised up the believer by the same power as that by which he raised Christ from the grave. The life is in the Son, and to have life we must have the Son. It matters not what else a man may have, "He that hath not the Son of God hath not life." As Adam, the first man, was head of the first creation, so Christ, the second man, is head of the new, having made an end of the old on the cross. And as in the first Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive.

And now, dear reader, have you the Son of God? Have you done with self, reckoning yourself to have died with Christ, and is your life hid with Christ in God?

There is another aspect of the cross, as it is written, "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." If we are dead with Christ, we must be delivered from this present evil world; for it is only the old nature that has any taste for the world, its ways, and its fashions. The world can find no more place in the affections of the new man than it did in Christ himself. He was not of the world, and neither the world nor its prince could find aught in or for Christ. He said to his Father, "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." How can we be when we are Christ's, and are crucified with him? If then, I am living for self, and the world, and its fashions and pleasures, I practically give the lie to God's truth as to the cross having crucified me to the world and the world to me.

Now, dear reader, I do not say that this is so in your particular case; but I observe continually that they who wear these crosses are remarkably worldly; are often dressed in the height of fashion, and caring for the things of the world. Evidently, the jewelled cross they wear has no power to separate them from the world and its vanities. And what a mockery it is to carry such an emblem into the scenes of worldly pleasure!

But you may be able to say, Blessed be God! Jesus loved me, and gave himself for me. I trust, too, you may add, and I myself have been crucified with him, and am alive with him. The world also is crucified to me, and I unto the world. Well, then, why do you wear a cross? You will perhaps say, I wear it to remind me of what Christ on the cross did for me. But let me ask, Is this proper? I would give you the fullest credit for a good motive, but on consideration you will agree with me that it is sinful to wear it for such a motive. God, in the wonders of his love, has given us the Holy Ghost to dwell in us, and to take of the things of Christ and show them unto us. Jesus said that he should bring all things to our remembrance that he had said. Now, in wearing a cross for such a purpose, you set aside the work of the Holy Ghost, and say that you need something better.

There are other reasons for not wearing the cross; but for the present dwell upon the blessed, solemn fact that the Holy Spirit dwells in the believer, and he is an abiding Comforter, never leaving or forsaking us. If we then live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit, that we may bring forth the fruit of the Spirit, "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with its affections and lusts.—Witness.

ON DRESS.

But we may be assured, the wisdom of the world will find out abundance of objections to this. Accordingly it is objected, first, If God has given us plentiful fortunes, if we are placed in the higher ranks of life, we must act suitable to our fortune. We ought, then, to dress according to our rank, that is, in "gold and costly apparel." Not to insist that none of you are of this rank, I answer, Where is this written? Our Savior once occasionally said, "Behold, they who wear gorgeous apparel are in kings' courts"; but he does not say they ought to be even there; he neither enjoins nor countenances it. And where is this either enjoined or allowed, by him or any of his apostles? Bring me plain, scriptural proof for your assertion, or I cannot allow it.

But did not God give express command by Moses, that some even among his chosen people should be adorned in the most exquisite manner, with gold, and precious stones, and costly array? Indeed he did; he expressly commanded this with regard to Aaron and his successors in the high priesthood. But to this I answer, first, this direction which God gave, with regard to the Jewish high priest, can certainly affect no person in England, unless the Archbishop of Canterbury. And I apprehend he does not plead the precedent.

Secondly, the Jews and we are under different dispensations. The glory of the whole Mosaic dispensation was chiefly visible and external; whereas the glory of the christian dispensation is of an invisible and spiritual nature.

But what, then, are gold and precious stones for? why have they a place in the creation? What if I say I cannot tell? There are abundance of things in the creation which I do not know the use of. What are crocodiles, lions, tigers, scorpions, for? Why have so many poisons a place in the creation? Some of them are for medicine; but whatever they are for, in whatever manner they may be useful, they are certainly not to be used in such a manner as God has expressly forbidden.

But if they were not thus adorned, kings and generals would be despised by their subjects and soldiers. Supposing they would, that is nothing to you; for you are neither kings nor generals. But it is absolutely certain they would not, if they were not despised on other accounts. If they are valiant and wise, they will never be despised for the plainness of their dress. Was ever general or king more esteemed or beloved by his subjects and soldiers than king Charles of Sweden? And it is sure he wore no gold or costly apparel, not so much as a common officer. But we need not go so many years back. Who is the prince that is now honored and beloved both by his subjects and soldiers, far beyond any other king or general in Europe? There is no need to repeat his name. But does he gain his honor and love by the costliness of his apparel? So far from it, that he rarely uses any other dress than the uniform of his own guards.

But if all men were to dress like him, how would tradesmen live? I answer (1), God certainly considered this, or ever he gave these commands. And he would never have given them, had he not seen that if they were universally observed, men in general would live better than they otherwise could; better in this world, as well as that to come. But (2) there is no danger at all that they would be universally observed. Only a little flock in any civilized nation will observe them till the knowledge of God covers the earth.—Com.

SINGING MINISTERS.

Ability to sing well is not only an accomplishment for social life, and a source of great personal enjoyment, but also a wonderful instrumentality for usefulness. The power of religious song, in connection with religious services, is inestimable. To a christian minister this qualification is scarcely second to any that he can possess. With it he can seal his exhortation or sermons indelibly upon the hearts of the people; with it he can breathe life and power into the sleepy prayer-meeting; with it he can subdue the heart of the sinner, lead the penitent to faith in the Savior, and inspire the christian with the joys of heaven. Many times has song determined the victory on the side of the right. Well-selected hymns, with tunes wisely adapted, and practiced until they can be sung with expression, seldom fail to do execution.

Many of our most vivid and lasting religious impressions, and pleasing religious associations, are connected with sacred song. An old refrain, as it echoes through the soul, will startle from their slumbers a thousand precious recollections of former days, companions, and joys. We doubt whether any be so poor as not to possess such treasures of memory. How vividly we recall all the circumstances, though more than forty years ago, when Rev. William Lummis, of the old Philadelphia conference, placed his hand on our boyish head, as he stood in the aisle of the old church, and sung,

"Death, he is the king of terrors,
And a terror to all kings," etc.,

and the cold chills ran from the crown of the head to the soles of the feet. He was not a great preacher, but he was a sweet singer, and with this smooth stone he slew many.

We have known several ministers of the gospel, popular and useful, whose principal dependence has been their ability to sing. They will have an appropriate hymn to sing at the close of the sermon, or sometimes will introduce it in the middle of the sermon with great effect. But without these eccentricities, a minister who can sing well doubles his power to do good. We advise our young ministers to cultivate music, not for ornament merely, but as a power of usefulness. As a refining and elevating study, Luther placed it next to theology. Especially is this important at the present day, when the tendency is so strong to make our sanctuary service of song a mere scientific performance. It is well for a minister to be independent of choirs, and of scientific performers. Churches who are in the habit of selecting their ministers should not overlook the quality under consideration—singing ministers. Send us a singing minister.—Pittsburg Advocate.

Gems.

— He that speaks, sows; he that hears, reaps: hence we should be guarded as to how we speak, and how we hear. "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear; but take heed how you hear!"

— Success rides on every hour; grapple it and you may win, but without a grapple it will never go with you.

— A real christian loves close, pointed, searching preaching, and seeks not the ministry of those who speak with enticing words of man's wisdom.

— The body needs rest, and he who takes no rest is guilty of filthiness of the flesh in continually abusing it in what otherwise would be the innocent employment of the physical and mental powers of man.

Live to do good. This world should be
But one united family,
One holy brotherhood;
Where each should for his neighbor feel,
Helping along the general weal,
And universal good.

— There was never a time when the gospel of an honorable and christian tongue more needed to be preached.

— Truth being founded on a rock, you must boldly dig to see its foundations without fear of destroying the edifice; but falsehood being laid on the sand, if you examine its foundations you cause it to fall.

— Hem the day well with prayer and praise, and it will be less likely to ravel out before night.

— The best memory is that which forgets nothing but injuries. Write injuries in the dust, and kindness in marble.

— The truth must be preached, though hell break out into opposition; and we must keep faith and a good conscience, though persecutors print on our sides the marks of the Lord Jesus.

When is the time for prayer?
In every hour, while life is spared to thee,
In crowds or solitude, in joy or care,
Thy thoughts should heavenward flee
At home, at morn and eve, with loved ones there,
Bend thou the knee in prayer.

— Let us never forget that every station in life is necessary, that not the station itself, but the worthy fulfillment of its duties, does honor to a man.

— Nature and existence depend upon the subsistence of the body by eating, but the excess of this constitutes the filthiness of the flesh in this particular.

— There are very few men who have become christian in their tongues.

— It is joy then, not sorrow, that is our strength; and they that have done most for God have been those who have had most joy in God.

— Pleasure is like a hornet—generally ends with a sting.

— No true minister is self constituted.

ADVICE TO YOUNG LADIES.

A DOUBLED-BARRELED SHOT AT FOLLY ON THE WING.

First, you are perfect idiots to go on in this way. Your bodies are the most beautiful of God's creations. It the continental galleries I always saw groups of people gathered about the pictures of women. It was not passion; the gazers were just as likely to be women as men; it was because of the wondrous beauty of a woman's body.

Now, stand with me at my office window, and see a lady pass. There goes one! Now, isn't that a pretty-looking object? A big hump, three big lumps, a wilderness of crimps and frills, a hauling up of the dress here and there, an enormous, hideous mass of false hair or bark piled on top of her head, surmounted by a little flat, ornamented with bits of lace, birds' tails, &c. The shop-windows tell you all day long of the paddings, whalebones, and steel springs which occupy most of the space within that outside rig.

In the name of all the simple, sweet sentiments which cluster about a home, I would ask, how is a man to fall in love with such a piece of compound, double-twisted, touch-me-not artificiality, as you see in that wriggling curiosity?

Secondly, with the wasp-waist, squeezing your lungs, stomach, liver, and other vital organs into one half their natural size, how can any man of sense who knows that life is made up of use, of sense, of service, of work, how can he take such a partner? He must be desperate, indeed, to unite himself for life with such a fettered, half-breathing ornament.

Thirdly, your bad dress and lack of exercise lead to bad health, and men wisely fear that instead of a helpmate they would get an invalid to take care of. This bad health in you, just as in men, makes the mind as well as the body faddled and effeminate. You have no power, and use big adjectives, such as "splendid." No magnetism! I know you giggle freely, "awful," but then this don't deceive us; we can see through it all. You are superficial, affected, silly; you have none of that womanly strength and warmth which are so assuring and attractive to man. Why, you become so childish and weak-minded that you refuse to wear decent names even, and insist upon baby names. Instead of Helen, Margaret, and Elizabeth, you affect Nellie, Maggie, and Lizzie. When your brothers were babies, you called them Bobby, Dickey, and Johnny; but when they grow up to manhood, no more of that silly trash, if you please. But I know a woman of twenty-five years, and she is as big as both my grandmothers put together, who insists upon being called Kitty, and her real name is Catherine, and although her brain is big enough to conduct affairs of state, she does nothing but giggle, cover up her face with her fan, and exclaim, once in four minutes. "Don't now, you are real mean."

How can a man propose a life partnership to such a silly goose? My dear girls, you must, if you would get husbands, and decent ones, dress in plain, neat, becoming garments, and talk like sensible, earnest sisters.

You say that the most sensible men are crazy after these butterflies of fashion. I beg your pardon, it is not so. Occasionally a man of brilliant success may marry a silly, weak woman, but as I have heard women say a hundred times, that the most sensible men choose women without sense, is simply absurd. Nineteen times in twenty, sensible men choose sensible women. I grant you that in company they are very likely to chat and toy with those overdressed and forward creatures, but they don't ask them to go to the altar with them.

Fourthly, among the young men in the matrimonial market, only a small number are independently rich, and in America such very rarely make good husbands. But the number of those who are just beginning in life, who are filled with a noble ambition, who have a future, is very large. These are worth having. But such will not, they dare not, ask you to join them, while they see you so idle, silly, and so gorgeously attired. Let them see that you are industrious, economical, with habits that secure your health and strength, that your life is earnest and real, that you would be willing to begin at the beginning in life with the man you would consent to marry, then marriage will become the rule, and not, as now, the exception.—Boston Congregationalist.

THE NAPOLEON EMPIRE.

POLITICAL REASONS FOR ITS RE-ESTABLISHMENT.

1. The present Republic, which has been patched up in Paris without the co-operation of the provinces, will most probably issue in quarrels among the republicans themselves, leading to general disquietude and tumult, and causing all the property-holders of the nation to long for the re-establishment of the firm and settled government of Napoleon III., under which for eighteen years they have enjoyed security for their property and commercial progress.

2. Not only the property-holders, but also the Roman Catholic priests, will be in favor of the recal of Napoleon III. The priests wield enormous influence in the provinces, and they well know that Republicanism (witness 1792 to 1795) is one of their deadliest foes. The continued payment of their stipends by the State would become rather dubious if a republic were established. And further, if it be true that Cardinal Lucien Bonaparte is likely to be the next Pope, his influence, we may reasonably presume, will be exerted among the French priests to re-place the Napoleon dynasty upon the throne—if, indeed, it will not have been already re-established before that time.

3. In addition to the proprietors and priests, a third class has to be added in favor of Napoleonism—viz., the regular army. Can we believe that the regular troops, for whose comfort every provision has been made by Napoleon III. during eighteen years' reign, will relish serving under an unstable heterogeneous republican government, which has already been reported to have proposed as conditions of peace to dispense henceforth with the greater part of its standing army? We know how strong is the feeling against Mr. Cardwell in the British army, for disbanding 20,000 soldiers and sending them adrift. And is it likely, in a military nation like France, that the army would approve of being told that their services were no longer wanted, and that they must retire into civil life? Now, whatever may be the transient feeling of bitterness among a few soldiers against the Emperor, while chafing under their defeat, he will be able to say to them, I fought at your head to the last; I shared in the misfortune of your being compelled to surrender to superior forces; and I participated in your captivity, refusing, like Louis Philippe, to secure my personal safety by an ignominious flight. Having thus stood by my army to the last, I rely upon them to stand by me, and not to desert their lawfully elected sovereign in the hour of national trial." The blame of the defeat will probably be attributed by the Emperor to the ineffective preparations made by Marshal Lebœuf, and to the partial failure of ammunition and provisions, through the mismanagement and dishonesty of army contractors and storekeepers.

4. Whether or not the king of Prussia will have any voice in the matter remains to be seen: but as far as his influence may go, it will be in favor of the reinstatement of Napoleon III., and decidedly against a republic. The king might reasonably consider a definite peace concluded with Napoleon III. to be far more likely to stand, especially during the lifetime of the latter, than any peace arranged with an ephemeral mushroom republican government, whose chance successors might in a few weeks repudiate the whole transaction, and commence the war afresh at the dictation of the mob.

There is also a strong democratic party in Germany to whom a French republic would be as a match to tinder-wood; and this internal danger may at last become the cause of Prussia having to yield to France the left bank of the Rhine which the prophecies predict.—Signs of Our Times.

"This is for your health."—PAUL.

STILL MORE ABOUT TOBACCO.—A repentant subscriber writes of his experience, and theologizes somewhat as follows:

"I noticed in the August number an account of how a man quit the use of tobacco. Now, I have had a little experience in a similar line. I used it more than twenty-five years. It destroyed a good set of teeth for me, cost me ten thousand dollars, and wasted ten years, the best part of my life. I found out, too, that I could never go to heaven unless I quit using it, as it is written in the good Book that no unclean thing can enter therein. I have not been able to ascertain that they have dishes or vessels in heaven to spit such filth as tobacco juice and cuds in, especially since no one may be found there that would clean them. Language fails to convey in words how filthy the tobacco habit is. The smell is observable all along the great lines of travel. All taverns and railroad stations are sinks of filth, made so by those who will chew and smoke."—Packard's Monthly.

Here is an acknowledgement which is of some value to lady-physicians, especially in the way of encouraging them to persevere in so useful a department of effort.

☞ Alcohol is a deceiver. It promises happiness, produces misery; promises honor, produces degradation; promises to promote friendship, causes bitter discord, and man to hate his best friends; promises to give strength, robs man of vigor, physical and mental; professes to be a good creature of God, is an agent of Satan. It is difficult to enumerate the different appearances under which it presents itself a man's friend, but in every case its pretentions are false.

PLEDGE OF THE TRY COMPANY.

We, the Undersigned, hereby pledge ourselves to abstain from Tea, Coffee, Tobacco, and all Intoxicating Drinks as a Beverage.

FOR THE SAKE OF CHRIST.

In the life of John Falk, the German philanthropist, founder of the "Society of Friends in Need," in Germany, there is an interesting incident related of one of the scholars, in the orphan-school connected with that society, which beautifully illustrates Matthew 25: 40.

It was the time of the evening meal, and when one of the boys had said the pious grace —Come, Lord Jesus, be our guest, and bless what thou hast provided—a little boy looked up and said:

"Do tell me why the Lord Jesus never comes. We ask him every day to sit with us, and he never comes."

"Dear child, only believe, and you may be sure he will come; for he does not despise our invitation."

"I shall set him a seat," said the little fellow; and just then there was a knock at the door. A poor, frozen apprentice entered, begging a night's lodging. He was made welcome; the chair stood empty for him. Every child wanted him to have his plate; and one was lamenting that his bed was too small for the stranger, who was quite touched by such uncommon attentions. The little one had been thinking hard all the time.

"Jesus could not come, and so he sent this poor man in his place—is that it?"

"Yes, dear child, that is just it. Every piece of bread and every drink of water that we give to the poor, or the sick, or the prisoners, for Jesus' sake, we give to him."—Stevenson's "Praying and Working."

IT IS HARD TO BE GOOD.

"Henry," said I to one of my weary scholars, "you have been a very good boy. I hope you will do as well all the term."

"I'll try, teacher" said Harry, with an audible sigh; "I'll try, but it is awful hard work to be good."

"Ah, Harry," thought I, as he turned away, "you are not the first one who has found this out. To be good is up hill work for all, and the hill is so high and so steep that none can climb alone. If you try ever so hard you will fail."

"Who will help me?" says one. Who can help me better than myself? Why not depend upon myself in this as in other things?"

Because you cannot do this alone. Because there is One to help you to be good, who longs to help you if you will but ask him—Jesus, your Saviour, is his name. He says, without me ye can do nothing, (nothing good.) It is hard work without him, but go to him, and you will find his yoke easy, and his burden light. It will not then be so "hard work to be good."

THE QUAKER BOY'S WISH.

All our readers have, at one time or another, expressed a wish for something. Now we want to tell you of the wish of a little Quaker boy. He was once in a congregation of Friends, who had assembled for the purpose of worshiping God. They do not preach, as most ministers, at a set time, but they sit still until they think they are moved by the Holy Spirit, and then any one in the congregation, whether male or female, may stand up and say what he or she desires. The congregation had been sitting in silence for a long time, when a little boy, between five and six years of age, stood upon the seat, and folding his arms together, with a childish lisp gave utterance to the following:

"My friends, I wish the Lord would make us all gooder, and gooder, and gooder, till there is no bad left!"

He then took his seat.

THE POOR CRIPPLE BOY.

George Howard lived in South Carolina. He was a cripple, and unable to do much for a living. Two shillings was all he had in the world, and he traveled four miles to the house of the agent of the Bible Society, and offered it for a Bible. The agent gave him a Bible worth three shillings, and took the two shillings. The committee were so pleased with what this poor boy had done, that they told the agent to give him back the money, and make him a present of the Bible. The poor boy's heart was filled with joy; he prized the Bible, and loved to read it every day. One verse he was especially fond of, "Come unto me all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." It was the verse which, by God's blessing, led him to Jesus. To have learned it was worth all that he had. It directed him to more than all the gold in the world could buy—pardon and peace through Jesus Christ.

AFRAID OF THE BOYS.—"You have an excellent Sabbath-school teacher, Henry; one of the best in the school, I should think."

"Yes, he knows all about the lesson, and knows how to tell it too; but there's one thing about him I don't like. He's afraid of the boys."

"Afraid of the boys?"

"Yes, he don't dare to ask the close questions. He skips every one as if he was afraid of them, or of us."

GOD KNOWS BEST.—"Lucy," said a friend one day to a little girl who was laid on a sick bed, "would you not like to be well and again at play?" Lucy thought for a moment, and then said, "God knows best, and what he thinks best pleases me best."

☞ "Pa," said a lad to his father, "I have often read of people poor but honest; why don't they sometimes say rich but honest?" "Tut, tut, my son, nobody would believe them," answered the father.

MAKE HASTE, O MAN, TO LIVE.

Make haste, O man, to live,
For thou so soon must die;
Time hurries past thee like the breeze;
How swift its moments fly.
Make haste, O man, to live!

Make haste, O man, to do
Whatever must be done;
Thou hast no time to lose in sloth,
Thy day will soon be gone.
Make haste, O man, to live!

To breathe, and wake, and sleep,
To smile, to sigh, to grieve,
To move in idleness through earth,
This, this is not to live!
Make haste, O man, to live!

The useful, not the great,
The thing that never dies,
The silent toil that is not lost,
Set these before thine eyes.
Make haste, O man, to live!

Make haste, O man, to live,
Thy time is almost o'er;
O sleep not, dream not, but arise,
The Judge is at the door.
Make haste, O man, to live!

THE POPULAR SUPERSTITION:—GHOSTS.

BY ELDER O. R. FASSETT.

But we must notice the Scriptures usually cited in proof of the existence of ghosts of the dead.

1. Those descriptive of the death of the patriarchs.

"Then Abraham gave up the ghost, and died in a good old age, an old man, and full of years; and was gathered to his people." Gen. 25: 8.

"To give up the ghost" does not mean, as some have maintained, "to give up the guest," as though a man had "a guest" within him that death makes him surrender up. The Hebrew word gah-vag, rendered "giveth up a ghost" (Job 14: 10), is defined by Gesenius as follows: "To breathe out one's life—to expire, to die." He gives Gen. 6: 17; 7: 21; Ps. 104: 29, as examples of the true use of the word. Prof. Geo. R. Noyes, as also Boothroyd, renders the text (Job 14: 10),—"Man expireth." The American Bible Union reads, "Man expires." The word has no reference whatever to a living ghost entity, that makes its exit at death out from the dead carcass, or clayey tabernacle. If so, then there are ghosts of brutes as well as of men, according to the teaching of the Scriptures (Gen. 6: 17; 7: 21); and the Indian's hope, as expressed in Pope's beautiful diction, is a good one—

"Lo! the poor Indian, whose untutored mind
Sees God in clouds, and hears him in the wind,
• • • • • • • • • •
—— thinks, admitted to that equal sky,
His faithful dog shall bear him company."

The Indian, with his hunting grounds and countless herds of buffalo and deer; the Mohammedan, with his luxurious couches, his beautiful houris; and the Christian, with his spirit-harp of gold, tuned to diviner melodies in a spirit-land, have all the same origin, in the heathen superstition, and may be traced back to Satan's master falsehood—"Ye shall not surely die." Gen. 3: 4.

But it is maintained, that as Abraham "was gathered to his people," and Jacob also "yielded up the ghost, and was gathered unto his people" (Gen. 49: 33), and their bodies were buried far from the burial-place of their fathers, that their "ghosts" which they "yielded up" must be referred to as being "gathered unto their fathers," and that to "the spirit-land." Let us see how this supposition will agree with other scriptures. When Jacob had brought to him the intelligence of the death of Joseph (for he supposed he had been devoured by wild beasts), he said, "I will go down into the grave unto my son mourning." Gen. 37: 35. It is apparent from this language of lamentation of the patriarch, that he expected to "go down" instead of "going up," and "into the grave" instead of "into heaven," and there to his son Joseph, who was a good boy; and certainly Jacob expected to be saved in a future life. The Hebrew word translated "grave" in this passage is sheol. The place is the receptacle for the dead, and where they are gathered is "down into sheol," and that must be the "grave"; for Jacob says again, when Benjamin was demanded by his brethren to go down into Egypt, "If mischief befall him by the way, then shall ye bring down my gray hairs with sorrow to the grave" (sheol). Does not this refer to the body? Have ghosts "gray hairs" in the spirit-land?

The simple meaning, then, of being "gathered to his people," according to the book of Genesis, is, being gathered to the grave when buried, or one's return to dust. Hence "Abraham's sons, Isaac and Ishmael, buried him"—"there was Abraham buried." Gen. 25: 8-10. And Jacob said in his dying charge to his sons, "I am to be gathered unto my fathers; bury me with my fathers." Gen. 49: 28-33. If it still be claimed that their spirits or ghosts are referred to in the sentence—"gathered to his people," as in the case of Abraham (Gen. 25: 8), then the patriarchs' spirits were gathered into the same receptacle with their idolatrous fathers! "Your fathers dwelt on the other side of the flood in old time, even Terah, the father of Abraham, and the father of Nachor; and they served other gods." Josh. 24: 2; 24: 14, 15. And in the book of Judges (2: 8-10), it is written that "Joshua died, and they buried him." "And also all that generation were gathered unto their fathers." By this we perceive that "burial" and being "gathered unto their fathers" are synonymous terms.

Our modern translators have rendered hades, the Greek word corresponding with the Hebrew sheol, uniformly, "underworld." Sheol and hades thus are made to appear an "under world." But is that the abode or receptacle of the spirits of the dead, and are they in conscious existence there? If so, they have not "ascended into the heavens." Acts 2: 34. And the theory that sends good men to heaven when they die, to "be with Christ," must be abandoned. What right have we to change the location of the abode of the departed dead to meet our fancy? Says Alexander Campbell:

"The Hebrews, Greeks, and Romans located all the souls of the dead under the ground. Were it either desirable or necessary to demonstrate that the receptacle of human spirits was understood by the ancient nations, Egyptians, Jews, and Pagans, of all superstitions to be deeper than the ground, a very long induction of authorities could be introduced. We might file documentary evidence incontrovertibly clear and definite."

But he adds: "We may dissent from the notion of place, and other circumstances, without impairing the weight of the evidence in favor of such a state as was indicated by the word hades."

We would like to know by what authority "we may dissent," especially when "the parable of the rich man and Lazarus" (Luke 16: 19–31) is quoted to prove the intermediate state, and which presents the Pharisaic doctrine of the intermediate and future rewards.*

Says Dr. Good: "For the most part [the disembodied spirits] were conveyed to a common receptacle situated in the interior of the earth, and denominated sheol, hades, hell, or the world of shades. Such was the belief of the multitude in all countries from a very early period of time. The same popular belief was common to the Greeks and Romans. . . . The popular tradition believed in most countries is, that this hell, hades, or invisible world, is divided into two very distinct and opposite regions by a broad and impassable gulf; that the one is a seat of happiness, a paradise, or elysium, and the other a seat of misery, a gehenna, a tartarus; and that there is a supreme magistrate and an impartial tribunal belonging to the infernal shades, before which the ghosts must appear, and by which they are sentenced to the one or the other, according to the deeds done in the body. Egypt is generally said to be the inventress of this important and valuable part of the common tradition, and undoubtedly it is to be found in the earliest records of Egyptian history."

Macknight, in a note on the parable of Luke 16, makes the following honest concession, in the light of ancient and traditional history:

"Because the opinions as well as the language of the Greeks had by this time made their way into Judea, some imagine that our Lord had their fictions about the abodes of the departed souls in his eye, when he formed this parable. But the argument is not conclusive.† At the same time it must be acknowledged that his descriptions of those things are not drawn from the writings of the Old Testament, but have a remarkable affinity to the descriptions which the Grecian poets have given of them. They, as well as our Lord, represent the abodes of the blessed as lying contiguous to the region of the damned, and separated only by a great impassable river, or deep gulf, in such a sort that the ghosts could talk with one another from its opposite banks. In the parable, souls whose bodies were buried know each other and converse together as if they had been embodied. In like manner the Pagans introduced departed souls talking together, and represent them as having pains and pleasures analogous to what we feel in this life; it seems they thought the shades of the dead had exact resemblance to their bodies. The parable says the souls of wicked men ‡ are tormented in flames. The Grecian mythologists tell us they lie in Pyriphlegethon, which is a river of fire, where they suffer the torments they would have suffered while alive, had their bodies been burnt."

THE SCRIPTURE TESTIMONY.

What say the Scriptures concerning this "underworld" as a place of conscious reward? "To the law and to the testimony." David says: "In death there is no remembrance of thee [O Lord,] in the grave (sheol) who shall give thee thanks?" Ps. 6: 5. "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." Ps. 115: 17. By which it is plain that the Psalmist regarded the "underworld" as a place of no conscious exercise of memory, even of the Lord; or of active praise, but a condition of silence profound. The important questions with him, therefore, were, "Wilt thou show wonders to the dead? shall the dead arise and praise thee? Shall thy loving kindness be declared in the grave, or thy faithfulness in destruction?" Ps. 88: 10, 11. A multitude of passages might be quoted to prove that his only hope was in the resurrection from the dead. But we turn to other testimony. The "preacher" with "upright words of truth"—"the words of the wise," exhorts us: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave (sheol) whither thou goest." Thus the "underworld," certainly, if the preacher has written "upright words of truth," can be no place of conscious reward. Eccl. 9: 10; 12: 8-14.

A passage concerning the Patriarchs is found in the New Testament which is quoted to prove the conscious existence of their spirits, to which we will refer before we dismiss this part of our subject.

The Sadducees, who disbelieved in the doctrine of the resurrection, at one time had an encounter with Christ upon the question whether the dead are to live again. Mark! Their effort was not to refute the doctrine of "the immortality of the soul," as conceived; but it was a question of the resurrection of men from their graves. See Matt. 22: 23–32. Christ confounded them by citing the language of God to Moses in the bush: "I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob" (Exod. 3: 6), and then affirming himself, "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." Matt. 22: 32. This was a conclusive argument. If God is not the God of dead men, but of the living, those fathers must live again. This is by him "who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were." Rom. 4: 17. Had this language been used to convince them that these Patriarchs' spirits were then living, that would never have proved their resurrection, which was the issue at stake. All spiritists believe in the conscious existence of dead men's spirits, but thousands of them deny the "resurrection." The Sadducees themselves saw the force of our Lord's argument in the premises, and became confounded in the charge, "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God" (v. 29), and slunk away in silence, giving place to the Pharisees to try their skill upon the wisdom of Him "who spake as never man spake."

2. The passage descriptive of Rachel's death:

"And it came to pass as her soul was in departing (for she died)."—Gen. 35: 18.

The "departing" of Rachel's "soul" is thought to be the exit of her ghost-self! But this fancied interpretation arises from the general superstition. The meaning is explained in the parenthesis—"for she died." It was simply the departure of her life. The New Testament will explain: "Whosoever will save his life shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it. For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" Matt. 16: 25, 26. The word which in verse 25 is translated "life," is in verse 26 rendered "soul."

A reverend gentleman with whom the writer once held a discussion, affirmed that "the original word did not mean life in verse 26; that it was a different word altogether." "We need scarcely observe," said he, "that an intelligent person must know that without being told." I had simply to quote from Dr. Adam Clarke the following remarks to set this matter at rest: "On what authority many have translated the word psuche in verse 25 life, and in verse 26 soul, I know not; but am certain it means life in both places."

The soul of a person is the life of the individual; and the same is true of the animal. And the entire person is a soul, "a living soul" (Gen. 2: 7) when alive; "a dead soul," when the life has departed. Hence our Savior's words as recorded by the Evangelist Luke: "For what is a man advantaged, if he gain the whole world, and lose himself?" Luke 9: 25. With the loss of "life" a man loses "himself." v. 24.

3. The passage descriptive of that restoration to life of the son of the widow of Zarephath, by Elijah.

Elijah prays: "O Lord, my God, I pray thee, let this child's soul come into him again. And the Lord heard the voice of Elijah; and the soul of the child came into him again, and he revived." 1 Kings 17: 21, 22.

This was merely the return of the life of the child; for the last clause explains the fact—"and he revived," i. e., re-lived. So the Shunamite's son was resuscitated by Elijah. 2 Kings 4: 31–37.

4. David's language on the death of his child.

"Now he is dead, wherefore should I fast? Can I bring him back again? I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me." 2 Sam. 12: 23.

Observe: the statement is first made, "he is dead." When, therefore, David says—"I shall go to him," what is it, but that he speaks of the "one event unto all; they live, and after that they go to the dead." Eccl. 9: 3, 4. "To death, and to the house appointed for all living." Job 30: 23. "The grave (sheol) is mine house . . . our rest together is in the dust." Job 17: 13–16. David refers to the same place which Jacob mentioned as he lamented the death of Joseph: "I will go down into the grave unto my son mourning." Gen. 37: 35. He could not think of going to heaven to be with him there, for that was neither his belief or hope as expressed anywhere in his writings. Besides, an inspired apostle said over a thousand years after David's death: "David is not ascended into the heavens." Acts 2: 34. And another: "David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption." Acts 13: 36. And David's hope, as expressed by himself, corresponds with the Scriptures: "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied, when I awake with thy likeness." Ps. 17: 15.

2. Samuel's Apparition.

The record of this is given in 1 Sam. 28. The statement is made in v. 3, that "Samuel was dead—and Israel had buried him;" from which we conclude he was not alive anywhere in the universe. It is next declared, "When Saul inquired of the Lord, the Lord answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets." This is a clear statement. Was that true and yet it is also true that God sent his prophet Samuel from the dead to communicate with him? I think not, inasmuch as the Lord would have nothing to do with Saul, and had left him to his own destruction: "The Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, and an evil spirit from the Lord troubled him." ch. 16: 14. If therefore Saul had any communication with or from Samuel it was through other agencies and from another source than God's "Spirit," or God himself; and the question is whether God's dead prophets are under the control of devils and witches! Let us see. Saul consulted with the "witch of Endor." He had previously "put away," in obedience to the Lord's command, "those that had familiar spirits, and the wizards out of the land." v. 3. But now in his fall he sends his "servants" to "seek a woman that hath a familiar spirit," in face of the fact that "all that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord." Deut. 18: 12.

The "witch" being found, he desires of her "divination by the familiar spirit," and says "bring him up, whom I shall name unto thee." (v. 8.) And the "woman said, Whom shall I bring up unto thee? And he said, Bring me up Samuel." v. 11. Queries: Was Samuel's ghost in heaven, or sheol? Was his spirit, with God where Christ is, or beneath in the ground? Or was the grave of Samuel on the opposite side of the earth from the throne of God in heaven in the diurnal revolution of the globe, so that the spirit of Samuel coming down from heaven entered his tabernacle and came through the ground; or did his ghost have to go through the earth from the regions of infinite space to shorten the distance between him and Saul? How is it that Samuel, the Lord's dear prophet, should come "up" instead of down, to make communications?

"When the woman saw Samuel, she cried with a loud voice." v. 12. Why did not Saul see him as well? Why was he visible to the woman and invisible to Saul? There is a mystery here unsolved only by the fact that she was a "spirit-medium." "The king said, What sawest thou? And the woman said, I saw gods ascending out of the earth." v. 13. As a "spirit-medium" under the influence of "demons" she must of course teach "the doctrine of devils:"—"Ye shall be as gods." "And he said unto her, what form is he of? And she said, An old man cometh up; and he is covered with a mantle. And Saul perceived that it was Samuel." From this description he "perceived." Do "the spirits" or "the ghosts" of the departed dead, of those who have died in old age and in decrepitude resemble their bodies after they have made their exit and entered the realms of blessedness or the Paradise of God? And are their "mantles" or garments which they wear on earth, or in which their dead bodies are laid out, immortalized and taken with them?

"And Samuel said unto Saul, Why hast thou disquieted me, to bring me up?" v. 15. Can we for a moment suppose that God leaves his dead prophets and saints, who have gone to their rest in the grave, or who have departed this life, in the power of witches and wicked apostates, to be disturbed and brought back to this world to be troubled with its affairs? Not for a moment. What, then, do you make of this record? inquires one. Simply this: It is a faithful history of a clever imposition practiced upon Saul by a spiritual medium, and nothing more. Josephus says: "The orders of Saul to his servants were that they should seek for him one of those women that could speak out of their bellies, and call forth the souls of the dead, that by this means he might know if his affairs should succeed. For this sort of belly-speaking can bring up the spirits of the dead, and tell fortunes." It was by the art of ventriloquism this spirit-medium carried on her conversation and practiced this deception upon Saul; and it was for this forbidden sin, that Saul, as an apostate, met his sad fate. "So Saul died for his transgression which he committed against the Lord, even against the word of the Lord, which he kept not, and also for asking counsel of one that had a familiar spirit, to inquire of it; and inquired not of the Lord; therefore he slew him, and turned the kingdom unto David the son of Jesse." 1 Chron. 10: 13, 14. Let all the apostates from God and the Christian religion beware how they consult spirit-mediums or spirits of demons.

SECRET CHAMBERS.

"Wherefore, if they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert; go not forth: behold, he is in the secret chambers; believe it not."—Matt. 24: 26.

The saints are not "caught up" to be secreted, but to "meet the Lord," who is then to make a "manifestation of the sons of God." Paul only carries the Thessalonian church so far in the light of the word, as to relieve their mind's anxiety in relation to a "past resurrection," and show them when and how they should enter the presence of and ever remain with the Lord; and there he dismisses the subject. But the prophet (Isa. 35: 10) carries these redeemed ones (v. 9) further on, when he says, "And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." Now he does not tell us here what those songs are, but in chapter 26 he gives us one of them; in 25: 8, he carries us to the resurrection (according to Paul in 1 Cor. 15: 51–55), and then the song in 26: 1–4; and John (Rev. 15: 3, 4) gives another, one of Moses, and one of the Lamb.

But how many (rather, how few) of our brethren have ever noted the unity of sentiment contained in Isa. 26: 8–11, and Rev. 15: 3, 4? and how small the number who have looked at verses 5–7 of Rev. 15, to compare with the prior declarations of 14: 15, and in order to learn the subjoined truth. The angel who gives command to him on the white cloud to reap the earth, and the angel who gathers the clusters of the vine of the earth, both come out of the temple in heaven, before the songs are sung, before the victors stand on the sea of glass; whereas the seven angels having the seven last plagues do not come out of the temple until after the songsters chant their lays; until after the victory is obtained over the beast, over his image, over his mark, and over the number of his name; until after the voice of the harpers, harping with their harps, is heard, having the harps of God, and standing on the sea of glass.

Now comes a seeming dilemma. If standing on the sea of glass is the symbol of deliverance, of redemption from death, and, as many claim, the seven vials are poured out before the Lord comes; how comes it that these seven angels are commissioned after and yet go before? How comes it that the saints sing the redemption song before, and yet not one of them is permitted to enter the heavenly temple until after the plagues are fulfilled?

Query. Would an interlude of a thousand years remove the dilemma? See Rev. 7: 14–17, and 21: 1–4. G. W. STETSON.

"IF I GO AWAY, I WILL COME AGAIN."

Grieved at heart were Christ's disciples,
When they heard that he they loved,
Was about to go and leave them,
To his Father's house above.
But he spake unto them saying,
"Let not your hearts be troubled so;
In my Father's house are mansions,
And to him I now must go."

Then a promise sweet he gave them,
Which relieved their hearts of pain,—
"If I go away and leave you,
I will surely come again."
Blessed promise! oh, how cheering
To those men of Galilee,
That their Lord, their blessed Savior,
They again on earth should see.

Years have passed, long years of sorrow,
And the Lord is absent still;
But we know he left the promise,
And he always will fulfill;
And to-day his saints are watching,
Waiting for their Lord to come,
When they'll change this world of sorrow
For a bright, eternal home.

For the World's Crisis.

AM I READY

For the near approach of that great and solemn day, that is to dawn upon a wicked world? Prophecy declares that we are almost down to the judgment. Truly, we are living in a time when we may expect startling events. All things indicate that we shall soon see Jesus revealed in the clouds of heaven. In view of this great event, how important it is that we be ready; that we may be found waiting when the Lord shall come. I sometimes ask myself the question, If the Lord was to come now, could I with confidence say, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us"? I sometimes fear, lest I be weighed in the balances and found wanting. How much there is in this wicked world to lead the mind away from heavenly things. Nothing but continual watching and praying will keep us from the snare of the wicked one. O for more faith in the true and living God. How important it is that we make advancement in the school of Christ every day of our lives, while probation lingers, that we may grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. I do believe it is our privilege to live so near the Lord, that we may have the evidence daily and hourly that we are truly the Lord's children. Then we shall have the approving smile of the dear Savior, which is better than everything else this world affords.

Eternal life in the kingdom of God. How blessed it looks. Can I bear the thought of being left out, when the Lord comes to make up his jewels? No, I must be there. By the help of the Lord, I will be there, and join the blood-washed throng in singing the joyful song of Moses and the Lamb. Glory to God, we will soon be there. How blessed it will be in the world to come. Not a shade of transgression; nothing will ever mar our perfect peace; no sickness, no sorrow, no partings caused by the cruel hand of death, and no tears; "for the Lamb, which is in the midst of the throne, shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."—Rev. 7: 17. Who would not gladly exchange a world like this, for one where there will be no tears?

My dear, unconverted friend, do you not want to be there? Then make Jesus your refuge now. Call upon him while it is an accepted time, and a day of salvation. Pretty soon he is coming back to earth to establish his kingdom, which shall be an everlasting kingdom. Then, dear sinner, if your name is not found written in the book of life, you are lost—lost forever. O decide at once that you will be Christ's. Do not wait for a more convenient season, but come now, and when Jesus comes have a right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city. Come, dear sinner; come, before it is forever and eternally too late.

Will you go, dear sinner, with me,
Where the Lamb will ever reign;
Where the loved of earth will greet thee,
And never part again?

SEEK FOR WISDOM AND TRUTH.

When the Egyptians were pursuing the Hebrews, the angel of the Lord went between them in the form of a cloud. "It was a cloud and darkness" to the Egyptians, but "it gave light by night" to the chosen people.

In these last days we have the word of truth, the revelation of the will of God in the Bible; and this is a light both by day and night to the believers, but only a cloud of darkness to the unbelieving and the disobedient.

It is matter of common observation that the eye sees what it is trained to see. Suppose a number of men were to travel quite a long distance over the same road or through the same region. These men are of various occupations, and they will each notice what is most familiar to them, and their eye will see what it is trained to see. If one is a house carpenter, he will notice every new or peculiar style of architecture, and everything in his own line of occupation. The farmer will see the condition and state of improvement of the soil, and will notice all those things which are connected with his daily work. And so of each and all who travel abroad.

Now what is the eye of the christian trained to see? It is trained to see truth in the Bible, and justice and mercy in the ordinary dealings of God with his creatures. These are the things he seeks and strives to see, together with all that belongs to his highest good and permanent and eternal well being. But what does the skeptic see? Continual contradictions and inconsistencies in the Bible; darkness and uncertainty everywhere. He seeks the darkest and most difficult and dangerous path, and delights in running against stones of stumbling and rocks of offence. This class of persons who "stumble at the word, being disobedient," has become very numerous in these days; and those who sow tares, and as it were throw about "firebrands, arrows and death," may see the fruit of their doings even among those who have made a profession of better things.

Now is there one who will listen to a word of exhortation, a word of warning, even from the fountain head and source of truth and wisdom? What company will you choose? For "he that walketh with wise men shall be wise; but a companion of fools shall be destroyed." If you choose God and his word and his people for your companions, then you walk with the wise; but if you prefer infidel works, and love to listen to the lectures of those who openly denounce the Bible, and call our Lord and Savior an impostor, then evidently you are a companion of fools. You are on the dark side of the cloud, and will never see the light of life, unless you change your position and your course of action. Have you already arrived at that state of settled obduracy, and determined opposition to the truth, that is described by the words, "Ephraim is joined to his idols; let him alone"?

If you are not yet in that hopeless condition, be entreated to turn away from all these evil companions, repent, and turn to the Lord with full purpose of heart. You have no time for delay; none too much time for you to escape for your life and lay hold on the hope set before you in the gospel. Your danger is as great and your case as urgent as that of Lot in Sodom. For as surely as Sodom was destroyed, so surely will the Lord destroy this place and all who have their portion here. Then "turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die?" F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

HEAVEN.

In religion and theology, it seems as though men were ready to give up the last trace of common sense. The word heaven has ever been a charming word. All men, in all ages, have been in love with it, because everything delightful and enduring was associated with it. All desire it for their future abode, or resting-place. They think perfect peace, blessedness and bliss will be enjoyed, and that will be their reward for well doing. But with regard to what will be heaven, or where will be heaven, they seem to be just as well contented without knowing as to know. They seem to be as well satisfied with the poetical description, that it is away "beyond the bounds of time and space," although it might be a doubtful journey to reach the desired haven. When this ethereal, immaterial heaven, beyond the reach of space or time, is lost in the distance, ever going but never reaching it, the next thought is, we go to the "spirit-land," and this is so vague there is but little ambition relative to it.

With regard to worldly matters, men never are seen with such obtuse indifference. If you should offer a Yankee one hundred acres of land, situated in Westboro, Mass., for one year's labor for work in your office, he would make it the first business of his life to find where it was, what it was, and how much it was worth. Do you suppose the Lord would give a man the reward of the meek, with so little interest in the promises to the righteous as not to know or care what they were? Common sense has respect to reward; and by faith Moses could reject the glittering honors of Egypt, and make bricks with the reproach-bearing Hebrews, because he had respect to the recompense of reward. So, I think all who have the mind of Christ will care to know enough about the plan of redemption to know what we are redeemed from, and what we shall get by redemption; also, what the reward of the righteous will be, and when they will receive it. Like Peter, this will be his first inquiry, We have left all, and what shall we have therefore? The response will as quickly be found, No man hath left houses and lands, wife and children, for my sake and the gospel, but what shall have in this time an hundred-fold, with tribulation, and in the world to come life everlasting.

The world to come will soon be explored; its advantages over this sin-cursed, suffering world will soon be known. This hope makes the whole being say, I'll be there. This looks like good common sense. So, although we have to bear reproach for this faith that grasps the Bible promises, yet we will claim to be among the reasonable, rational, common-sense disciples of Jesus, with all those that died in faith, who received not the promises, but saw them afar off, and were persuaded they would get them at the right time; and we, with them, soon expect the better country. O that men would come to their senses theologically, biblically, and religiously, and be waiting for redemption. L. BOUTELL.

— Mental powers may fill a chapel; but spiritual power fills the church. Mental power may gather a congregation; but spiritual power saves the soul. We want spiritual power.

TELL THE GOOD NEWS.

It is the duty of every one who knows the good news of salvation through Christ, to tell about it, as he has opportunity and ability, to his companion who does not know it, that he too may be saved. It is the duty of every christian who can, to tell the good news to a Sabbath school class of children, or of young people, or adults, or to a meeting for prayer and conference, or to any other appropriate meeting where it will promote the glory of God, and the good of man, and to exhort men to come to Jesus. These duties are done daily by earnest, working christians. They are done in accordance with the divine injunction, "Let him that heareth, say, Come." They are done in accordance with the New Testament usage.

When the persecution arose about Stephen, the members of the church at Jerusalem were all scattered abroad except the apostles, and "they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word"—telling the good news. They labored as evangelists everywhere they went, without any official obligations, or any express authority. They were moved by the inward power of that faith which cannot but speak of the truth of which the heart is full; they were influenced by the Spirit with whom they had been anointed; they were controlled by the love of the Savior, to whom they owed the remission of their sins, and all their blessed hopes. They held no office, but were invested with the general priest-hood of believers."—Free Methodist.

SAINTS UNKNOWN, STARS UNSEEN.

As there are stars in the sparkling firmament of heaven of different magnitudes and glory, so there are saints of different stations in the church of God. Some, like stars of the first magnitude, point out the way to bliss; while others, like stars of a second, third, and fourth magnitude, sparkle with an upright walk, and heavenly conversation, and condemn a wicked world. All these glorify God, as it were, in an active manner; but there is another class of his precious ones, who glorify God only in a passive manner, compared to others. Those are the secret, private and retired christians; who, like the stars that lie concealed in the amazing voids of space, and never strike the naked eye, nor seem connected with our system, are only known to God.

But as the glory of God's creating hand, though less visible to us, is as really displayed among those stars that he has stationed so sublime, as among those which he has dropped nearer to our earth, so he is glorified by the private, as well as the public christian; and the resignation of the one to the divine disposal may be as acceptable to God, as the more active labors of the other. How is God satisfied, so to speak, to see his creature wholly at his command; his will moulded into the will of the Most High, his desires measured by heaven's distribution of mercies, and his ambition only to be like God. Here the whole man, with his whole concerns, is wholly devoted to God. Here rebel thoughts are slain, and the unknown saint only waits the will of God to fall in with fully, freely, and without reserve. Such a heart God dwells in, and such a soul is his throne.

Nothing pleases God better, than when all he does pleases his people. Thus the soul ripens for glory, and a sacred interesting correspondence is carried on between the heart and heaven. The man rolls himself and all his concerns over on the indisputed will of him that cannot err. Nothing can go wrong with the man, because divine wisdom orders all for him; yea, what he thinks hard in itself, if he have no sinful hand in it, he embraces and submits to, because of him that sends it. He sounds God's praise loudest, who is silent before God. While the profession of some is blazing, the love of his soul is burning. While others march heavenward in the broad day, and before the wide world, this is a walk within doors, in his own house at home.

Of all things, grace grows best in retirement, and, like Jacob, when left alone, he wrestles with the angel of the covenant, for blessings to himself, his family, the church, and the whole world. He is not less circumspect that not an eye is on him, but keeps clean hands, from a clean heart; not like the painted hypocrite, that must be religious for credit's sake. He has his conversation in heaven, and his communion with the Most High. Happy is he in his life, happy at his death, for he lives with God, dies in the Lord, and goes to be forever with the Lord.—Solitude Sweetened.

For the World's Crisis.

LAYING UP TREASURES.

The one great object of the world seems to be to lay up treasures. But the wrong is not so much the seeking to lay them up, as the laying up the wrong kind in the wrong place. Christ said, "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven"; and we also read, "He that hath pity upon the poor, lendeth unto the Lord." Can you think of any surer place than with the King of glory? Here the moth may corrupt, and thieves break through and steal; there, never.

O, what a relief to find in this selfish, money-loving world, one who really takes up his cross and follows Jesus; who has consecrated his time, talents, and money to Christ's cause.... Why don't we give to his poor? We may not have money, but we have much that we can give; a kindly word, a helping hand, a smile, or a cup of cold water even, will not fail of its reward. They are all treasures laid up. "I was sick, and in prison, and ye visited me, says Christ." How selfish and unchristian we often are, and how we neglect his little ones. And "inasmuch as ye did it not," etc.—We know it all, and let us take good heed that it be never spoken to us.

The World's Crisis
AND
SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

LIBERAL OFFERS.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

We are anxious to have our paper reach several thousand new readers the coming year, and become a blessing to them. It is the best means we have of sowing the seed of the gospel of the kingdom in some hearts, and we should all awake, and do whatever we can to have its warnings of the coming judgment reach as many new readers as possible.

Some of our preachers have done nobly, and others would gladly help on the good cause, if they could receive aid for their families while they spend their time for the paper. For the benefit of such, the A. C. P. Society, at a recent meeting, by vote authorized the Agent to pay ten per cent to preachers on all collections for the Crisis and Young Pilgrim; and it is hoped they will take hold of the work in earnest, and have great success. Those who understand the expense of publishing a paper, know that it would cost no more to set up the type for twelve or fifteen thousand copies, than it does for a less number; hence, after our regular issue of about nine thousand copies is run off, we could print several thousand more at the cost only of press work and paper. It has, therefore, been concluded by the Editorial Committee and Business Agent, to whom the Society referred this subject, to make the following liberal offers to new subscribers, to induce them to form clubs, and thus make success easy to all who put forth efforts to obtain new subscribers

TRIAL OFFER.

We will send the World's Crisis three months on trial, to new subscribers, for fifty cents. We ask our friends to obtain yearly subscriptions, if possible; but where subscribers can be obtained for only three months, please visit them again, and, if possible, get them to renew before their paper is stopped at the end of three months.

To aid in obtaining new subscribers for 1871, we make the following offer of nearly

Three Months Free.

We will send the Crisis—for the balance of this year, from the time the name is received—free to all new subscribers for 1871, sent in before Jan. 1st.—Rate $2.50.

Now is the time to subscribe, and put forth energetic efforts to obtain new subscribers.

CLUBBING WITH OTHER PAPERS.

As many persons take several papers, and could be induced to take the Crisis, if they could get two papers at club rates, we have accepted offers to club other papers with the Crisis, which will enable our friends to obtain subscribers where it would otherwise be impossible to introduce our paper.

If any of our regular subscribers wish any of the papers on the list at club rates, they can get new subscribers for the Crisis, as it is not necessary that both papers should be sent to the same address.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS THREE OR SIX MONTHS FREE.

We will send the World's Crisis six months, and the Phrenological Journal and Packard's Monthly (price $3.00) one year for $3.00; or the World's Crisis three months, with the Rural New Yorker (price $3.00) one year for $3.00; or, three months with the New York Weekly Tribune (price $2.00) one year for $2.00; or three months with the Bee-Keeper's Journal and National Agriculturist (price $1.00) one year for $1.00.

NEW YEAR'S GIFTS.

Now is a good time to think of Christmas and New Year's presents. There are many poor saints who are looking for the coming of Jesus, who are very anxious to take the Crisis, but are not able. Are there not many of our readers who are able and willing to make such hearts glad every week the coming year by sending them the Crisis? Come, Bro. A., Bro. B., and a host of others, seek out some poor saint in your neighborhood, or among your acquaintance, and forward the address and money for the benefit of that lone pilgrim, who seldom gets to meeting.

Another suggestion: Would it not be well to send the paper to some relative, or friend, who has never heard the reasons of our hope? Such may never hear about it, unless some one makes a sacrifice for their benefit. This is often a successful way of reaching our friends. Try it. Very happy results have proceeded from such a course.

CALIFORNIA.

In consequence of a Macedonian cry from San Francisco, California, the Mission Board have decided that it is best for us to go to the Pacific coast first, and sound the alarm; while Bro. Sheldon and others may go into the Southern field. This is the hour for action in all directions.

For some months, the cry has been sounding from California, Come over and help us. We now feel it our duty to go. Pray for us. If we ever needed the prayers of the faithful it is now. The times are perilous; wickedness abounds; the judgment day is at hand; and but few are ready. O what a solemn hour is the one in which we are living. How like the days of Noah and Lot. Who will lend a helping hand in the great work? There is not a moment to be lost. This is the time to "run to and fro," and sound the alarm every where, to awaken the sleeping virgins. "The marriage of the Lamb" is at hand. Get ready, get ready.

P. S. Since penning the above, we have received another communication from California, which may be found in this paper. Please read it. It is headed "San Francisco." The writer is a very intelligent gentleman, who has been editor of a prominent paper in San Francisco, and is now connected with the municipal courts.

AFFAIRS IN EUROPE.

There is a strong prospect that a radical change will come soon among the nations of Europe. It is generally believed that the war between France and Prussia is near its end. The French are tired of their terrible situation, and must submit to famine before many weeks, unless they yield to the Prussians. The better class of people are in favor of closing the war. This is also for the interest of the Prussians; for the longer the war continues, the worse it is for them. The French are so reduced in strength that they are obliged to submit to their conquerors. But it appears that King William will treat with no one but Napoleon; consequently, arrangements are being made for his return to the throne of France.

The following in the Boston Daily Journal, Dec. 1st, is from its leading editorial:—

THE PEACE RUMORS.

The new rumors of coming peace derive a certain degree of plausibility from current events. The cause of France, which has recently shown some reviving symptoms, has manifestly come to a stand-still. Gen. Trochu has at length made a sortie in earnest. As was feared, from the character of that commander, it came too late. The time upon which he was counting, as if it had been a French auxiliary alone, has been profitable to the Germans also, who, strengthened at every available point, repulsed the French troops without any apparent difficulty. On the outside, the great relieving army of the Loire has met with no better success. If it has not received an overwhelming defeat, it has encountered such a reverse as will stand for that, unless it withdraws promptly from the reach of its antagonist. In any point of view, its mission as a reliever of Paris is finished. The Germans have shown that they are abundantly able to deal with the besieged and at the same time to detach forces enough to destroy Palladine's army. Then, with hunger thrown into the scale, what can Paris do but get ready to capitulate? It may take its rulers some time to realize their situation, but the goadings of famine will hurry the process, to say nothing of more disastrous sorties.

This anticipation of peace, however, seems to have given rise in Europe, particularly in official circles, to a very singular rumor. It is to the effect that, by a connivance of the Prussian authorities, the French prisoners in Germany—upwards of three hundred thousand—are to be delivered up to Louis Napoleon, who is to march in state to Paris, subdue the refractory Republicans, if necessary, at any rate, restore order and resume the Empire. The London Times declares this programme to be "highly probable."

Undoubtedly the Germans fancy that this would be a very agreeable programme if it could be made to succeed, and the state and deference with which they have surrounded their imperial prisoner look as if they still had work laid up for him to do. Once back in Paris at the head of his army, he would expel the Republic, which, of course, no monarchy of good and regular standing wants to see anywhere in Europe.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

The Eastern question, in relation to the position of Russia, is one of first-class interest to the nations of Europe, and must sooner or later be brought to an issue. It is a question in which all the great powers of Europe, including Turkey and Italy, are most deeply interested. It may be the last bone of contention, and lead to the final conflict among the nations. It has already assumed large proportions; yet it may rest for a short time, till some other matters receive attention.

Says the New York Herald:—

"But even while this Eastern war cloud has thus enlarged till it overshadows all Europe, the local difficulties of France, Spain and Italy are of such a nature as to divide the general attention of the civilized world. There appears now to be very little hope for the French republic or for France. The capitulation of Paris may be close at hand; and the army sent forward to its relief from the South, is, with Tours, in more imminent danger than Paris itself. King William has broadly suggested that there can be no peace without the annexation to Germany of Alsace and Lorraine, and no peace without a responsible government for France. Does he mean by this the restoration of Napoleon or his regency, or a call to the throne of one of the younger Bourbons? We cannot tell; but the capitulation and surrender of Sedan and the capitulation of Metz point to the Napoleonic dynasty. If so, and if there is peace upon this basis, we may look for another revolution in France with the retirement of the Germans."

Obituary Poetry.—We frequently receive a long piece of poetry composed on the death of some friend of the writer. Such articles should be sent to the friends for whose comfort they were written. We should be pleased to gratify those who are interested in such obituary lines; but as the most of our readers are unknown to the mourners, and would not be interested, those who send such articles must not expect to see them in the columns of "our paper."

Personal.—We learn that Bro. Storrs is still very feeble, and that his recovery is doubtful. Pray for him, that his last days may be his best.

Dr. W. K. Everson, of Chicago, has succeeded in removing the cancer from the face of Bro. Himes, and it is hoped that he will soon be well again. The Dr. is noted for his skill in the treatment of cancers, as well as other diseases.

Hygienic Home.—Dr. E P. Miller, who was long connected with the Laight Street Institute, has opened a new hygienic institution, at 41 West 26th St., near Madison Square, New York City. Those who wish to put themselves under the care of a skillful hygienic physician, or to board where they can get good food, will do well to call on Dr. Miller. In connection with his institution will be found the Turkish Bath, Eclectric Bath, Movement Cure, and Lifting Cure.

Excellent.—In another column will be found an excellent article from Bro. Geo. E. Merrill, headed, "Pray for the preachers." It is a word in season—just the thing that is needed.

Talks about People's Stomachs, is the title of a new work just issued by Dr. Dio Lewis, of Boston. Like all of his works, it is brimfull of common sense. We do not know of another writer on matters pertaining to health, who says so many good things as Dr. Lewis.

In a few weeks he intends to publish another new work, entitled "Our Girls." This will be of special value, not only to girls, but to all women. We have seen some of the proof-sheets, and are satisfied the book will be one that every body should read.

"Talks about People's Stomachs" is for sale at the Crisis Office.

"HEALTH BY GOOD LIVING."

This is the title of a new work by Dr. Hall, of Hall's "Journal of Health," which I have read with eagerness, and am very free to say it is by far the best work on the subject I have ever read. It is as full of good common sense "as an egg is full of meat." The great majority of people get sick and die, because they do not know how to live. This book clearly points out the way, and if people will only read it, and practise what it teaches, a vast amount of sickness, suffering and death, will be avoided. This book ought to be in every family in the land. It is greatly needed. Send for it at once, and read and practise what it teaches, and my word for it, you never will regret it.

A. P. Moore.

The above valuable work is for sale at this office, and will be sent by mail to the address of any one remitting publisher's price—$1.50 per copy. Ag't.

TIME'S FAREWELL.

We have just published a tract with the above title, written by Bro. O. D. Woodruff. A good, stirring, timely tract; just the thing to scatter everywhere, and should be scattered by the thousands. Price by mail, 10 cents per dozen; 75 cents per hundred; $6.20 per thousand. Ag't.

Crisis Free.—We send the Crisis free for the remainder of the year only, to those who subscribe for 1871 and send us $2.50 in advance.

"WHO CAN TELL?"

The condition of the Pope grows worse instead of better. He is like the worm within the ring of fire. It burns him on all sides, and he cannot get out of the ring. Apparently, there is no way of escape. Another crisis in Rome is at hand. Things cannot remain as they are very long. The Pope's infallibility affords him but poor protection when he needs it most. His "dominion" is gone. The following editorial remarks are from the New York Herald of Nov. 26th:—

"The new King of Spain is a son of King Victor Emmanuel of Italy. The King of Italy has recently appropriated the States of the Church, including the city of Rome, and he has done this in response to the general voice of 'young Italy' for Rome as her capital. The Pope has protested at every step against these sacrilegious outrages; they say he has ordered the churches within his holy city to be closed with the entry and during the presence of King Victor, and at last, all other resources failing, the Holy Father has issued a bull involving the 'major excommunication' against the aforesaid King of Italy and against all concerned in aiding and abetting him in these heretical and abominable spoliations of the patrimony of St. Peter. This may prove 'the Pope's bull against the comet,' but it may prove something worse to the excommunicated parties. As the head of his church the Pope is infallible. All good Catholics, therefore, as his followers, must support him in this excommunication of the king of Italy and the Italians—anathema maranatha. Between the infallible Pope and a fallible king the loyal Catholic must stand by the Holy Father. The king of Italy, then, and all his backers in these Roman spoliations may soon find themselves in hot water, and in a hot fire, too; and the faithful Catholics of Spain may, perhaps, be inspired to a revolution against this son as an accessory of an excommunicated robber of the Pope.

These things may come to pass; but, on the other hand, the Pope may be compelled to seek a place of refuge under the protection of the Queen of Protestant England in Malta, or under the wing of the Protestant king of Prussia somewhere in Germany. The bull of the Holy Father against the king of Italy and his confederates is a declaration of war and means a war with the weapons of the church against the usurping State now in occupation of Rome. Will this war end in the quiet retirement of the Pope from his capital, or will it go on until these existing European complications, and revolutions and factions become more complicated than ever? Who can tell? We can only say that this fearful encyclical of the Pope must be considered as another added to the difficulties in the way to the pacification of Europe."

" For lumber, straw, hay, fuel, pumps, freight, etc.	263.69
" Rent of ground, insurance on camp property, interest, printing, railroad fares, etc.	148.84
" For services rendered by persons in the boarding department, at the various stands, work on the ground, expenses of committee, etc.	986.13
" For groceries, provision, and the various articles sold at the boarding house and at the refreshment stands	2827.54
Total expenditures	$5093.97
Balance in Treasurer's hands	$207.63

There are pledges to the amount of $92.00 not yet paid. Although our number of free boarders was quite large, though somewhat less than the previous year, yet the unexpectedly large receipts from the refreshment stands and the boarding department, together with the very liberal donations and contributions of the brethren and sisters, enabled the committee to pay up the large debt left over from last year, meet all the demands of this season, and still leave a good balance in hand, with which to commence another meeting, the Lord so directing, the coming year.

The committee are very thankful to our heavenly Father for his special care and blessing, spiritually and financially, it being in every respect one of the best meetings we have ever held.

For the cordial support and ready cooperation rendered by our brethren and sisters, they will please accept the hearty thanks of the committee, and our earnest prayer that our soon coming Lord will at last gather us all into "the camp of the saints," to enjoy his presence together forevermore.

The Advent Christian Association nominated and reported to the brethren and sisters assembled at the preachers' stand, the names of the following brethren to serve as committee for the ensuing year: S. G. Mathewson, Geo. T. Adams, Miles Grant, H. Munger, J. Hemenway, O. D. Woodruff, and I. B. Potter. The report was accepted, and the above named brethren chosen.

THE CRITICAL GREEK AND ENGLISH CONCORDANCE.

A BOOK FOR BIBLE STUDENTS.

A Critical Greek and English Concordance of the New Testament. Prepared by Charles F. Hudson, under the direction of H. L. Hastings, Editor of the Christian. Revised and completed by Ezra Abbott, LL. D., Assistant Librarian of Harvard University. Pp. 532.

This is the first Greek and English Concordance ever prepared and published in America, and in many respects the most valuable ever published anywhere. It contains—

1. References to all places where every Greek word in the New Testament may be found,—four or five constantly-recurring particles excepted.

2. All the English words and phrases by which these Greek words are rendered, both in the text and in the margin of the common version.

3. All the various readings derived from hundreds of ancient manuscripts, written before the discovery of printing, and embodied in the four best editions of the Greek New Testament,—those of Griesbach, Lachmann, Tischendorf, and Tregelles,—to which are added the confirmatory readings of the very ancient but recently-discovered Sinaitic Manuscript.

4. An index of English words, by means of which persons entirely unacquainted with the Greek language can find the original for any English word in any passage, and can trace and ascertain its usage and the manner of its translation throughout the entire New Testament, and can also detect any various readings occurring in the four critical editions above named.

OPINIONS OF SCHOLARS.

"An excellent aid to critical students of the New Testament. Adapted at once to common and most critical use. A marvel of condensation. It must have cost an immense amount of labor. It is really an excellent work."—E. O. Haven, D. D., LL. D., President of the Northwestern University.

"I think there is no better book for a student of the New Testament, provided he could have but one."—E. Abbott, LL. D., Assistant Librarian of Harvard University.

Price—cloth, $2.50; leather, $3; morocco, gilt, $5. Ten copies, cloth, $20. Sent, postage paid, on receipt of the price. Size, six and three-fourths inches long, four and five-eighths wide, seven-eighths thick.

"THE PROGRAMME."

A tract for church festivals, of eight octavo pages, containing the matter usually printed on thirty-two tract pages, and was originally written for distribution at a church fair, and though in the style of a genuine programme, is so worded that the practises and opinions which at first sight it might seem to support, are completely refuted by the Scripture which in every instance accompanies.

For sale at this office. Price 20 cents per dozen; $1.30 per one hundred, postpaid.

PURITY OF HEART.

Said Jesus: "Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God." Such a state is attainable on some principle, or Jesus never would have uttered such a statement. Purity of heart is a heaven-born characteristic, enjoyed only by those who have the mind of Christ. The carnal heart is impure in the sight of heaven. It cannot purify itself by a routine of good works: "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost." Only by experiencing this divine renovation, can we secure that internal purity which will prepare us to "see God," and dwell in the heavenly kingdom.

Much depends upon the possession of this purity, for a pure heart will lead to a pure life in this world, and to a pure home hereafter. The heart is a fountain which is continually sending forth either sweet or bitter streams. Let the fountain be cleansed, and the streams will be pure. When the heart is under the sanctifying control of the Holy Spirit, it will be pure. While the heart is regulated by an influence from the heavenly throne, it will remain pure. But whenever the heart is not controlled and regulated by the Spirit of God, it is destitute of genuine purity.

We can be and ought to be pure. But what is our standing before God? Are we "pure in heart," thus possessing the basis of a pure life? Are our ardent "affections on things above," and sweetly entwined around the the precious Savior? Are we fervently aspiring after the mind of Christ? Are we earnestly hungering and thirsting after righteousness? Have we a relish for secret devotion? Do we love the prayer-meeting? Are we praying christians? Are we sincerely striving to win souls to Christ? Is the Spirit of God dwelling in us? Are we building each other up "on our most holy faith" in a practical sense? Can we give an affirmative reply to these questions? Then ours is a "blessed" position, and if we continue in this state we shall finally be permitted to "see God;" for when we are made "equal to the angels," like them we shall gaze on Deity, for said Jesus, "Angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven." The saints, too, will enjoy this privilege when changed to the immortal state, and made "equal to the angels."

Let us all be pure in heart, and ready to meet Jesus at his coming. W. S.

DID THE DISCIPLES BELIEVE IN THE EXISTENCE OF DISEMBODIED SOULS?

To prove that the disciples of Christ believed that a personal soul survives the death of the body, we are referred to the following texts: "But when they saw him walking upon the sea, they supposed it had been a spirit, and cried out."—Mark 6: 49. "They were troubled, saying, It is a spirit."—Matt. 14: 26. Nothing is said about a human spirit. They knew of the existence of two orders of spirits—angelic spirits, and satanic spirits; for "he maketh his angels spirits," and devils are called "unclean spirits"—"seven spirits more wicked than himself"; and they supposed that they had a spirit of one of those orders of spirits. There is not a hint that they supposed they had seen the disembodied spirit of some dead man. Upon another occasion, "They were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they had seen a spirit."—Luke 24: 37. Jesus allays their fears by saying, "Handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have." Angelic spirits have often been mistaken for men, and at other times men have been filled with fear in their presence, as in the case of Daniel (10: 12). But in one of these instances, fear was awakened by seeing a personage, while the doors were carefully closed, mysteriously appear in their midst, which proved not to be an angelic spirit, as they first supposed, but Christ himself. But if the disciples had really fancied that they saw a human spirit, the proof would hurt our opponents more than it would help them, for it would militate against the doctrine of the emigration of human spirits to heaven and hell at death, and prove that they are likely to be walking on the sea, and getting into houses after the doors are locked, instead of being in heaven or hell. W. S.

DID SAMUEL'S SOUL APPEAR TO SAUL?

For the want of better proof that a personality outlives the body, we are frequently informed that the disembodied soul of the prophet Samuel appeared to king Saul after the death of Samuel's body, and conversed with him. From the record in 1 Sam. 28, we learn the following facts:

1. Not a word is said about Samuel's soul—they only guess it means his soul.

2. Whatever appeared, came at the bidding of a witch. Have wicked witches power over the departed souls of saints?

3. Saul said, "Bring me up Samuel"; and the witch said, "I saw gods ascending out of the earth"; and Samuel said, "Why hast thou disquieted me to bring me up?" Do the souls of saints go into the earth at death? If not, then Samuel's soul did not appear; if they do, then they do not go to heaven at death.

4. Saul saw nothing himself, but inquired of the witch, "What form is he of?" She replied, "An old man cometh up." Do some souls look older than others? And from her description, "Saul perceived that it was Samuel."

5. He states to Saul, "To-morrow shalt thou and thy sons be with me"; if he was in bliss, those wicked men were to be in bliss too, if he spoke the truth; but Saul did not die for several days afterward; so it was not Samuel that talked, as a falsehood was told.

6. Either the witch was purposely deceiving Saul, or it was a freak of demonology—demons appearing—one personating Samuel, and talking in his stead, and lying as usual. These "gods" existed prior to the death of men (Gen. 3: 5); consequently cannot be disembodied human souls. Ancient witchcraft was connected with demonology. W. S.

Departure of the Soul.—To prove the disembodied state of men after death, or the existence of spirit-men independent of the body, we are often referred to the following statements: "As her soul was in departing" (Gen. 35: 18), and, "Let this child's soul come into him again." 1 Kings 17: 21. We fully believe that the life, sometimes called soul, leaves man at death, but that is not a personality. The original term nephesh, rendered soul in these texts, is also translated life and lives by the same translators no less than one hundred and twenty times in the Old Testament scriptures; and the same term is as really applied to beasts as to men, as in the following texts: "In whose hand is the soul [nephesh—life] of every living thing."—Job 12: 10. "A righteous man regardeth the life [nephesh—soul] of his beast."—Prov. 12: 10.

If nephesh does not signify a personality within when applied to beasts, why claim that it does when applied to man? We deny that the term ever signifies a personality within man or beast. "As her life was in departing"; "Let this child's life come into him again," is the obvious import of these texts, though the present translation is not objectionable when we remember that life is one of the meanings of the term soul. THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 24th, 1870, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

SAN FRANCISCO.

To the World's Crisis:—I notice that preparations are being made for a thorough mission canvass of the Southern States. Undoubtedly it is a ripe time for awakening an interest in that section of the country on the great truths in regard to the state of the dead, etc., which the Adventists prominently advocate. But the announcement induces me to inquire in this public manner, Why has California been so long neglected by the missionary preachers of your church? I have repeatedly written to leading men of your faith, urging upon them the demand that existed here for preaching the truths referred to, and expressing my confident belief that it would require comparatively little effort to gather and build up a church-fold in San Francisco. And I say now, directly, that I feel satisfied that Miles Grant, or H. L. Hastings, or Wm. Sheldon, or any man of equal ability in the ministry, could within a year from the commencement of work here, return twice the amount to the mission treasury that was required for inaugurating the service. I cannot, I need not restate at this time the many grounds I have for this belief; nor need I apologize for placing the appeal upon a somewhat selfish basis. It is right that the Mission Board should consider, to a certain extent, the probabilities of success in the attempted establishment of Advent societies in sections where there has never been any earnest effort to promulgate Advent church doctrines.

I was greatly in hope of Miles Grant's resolution to come here, and preach during the winter season. Now is the most appropriate time of the year to begin the work. Some of your readers may not know that we have no storms of snow here in the winter. The most beautiful days of the year in San Francisco are in the month of February. But the long night of the consequent evening leisure are with us, of course, as with you during the winter months. We are on the same side of the equator! I am disgusted when I go to one of our popular churches and hear the cream-cheese preachers dilate upon the "spirit-land into which the just are ushered at death," and remember that in this great city there is not one man in the ministry of truth to openly combat and overthrow the error. As it came in course, in conversations with friends, I have often talked of the gross errors of the orthodox and Roman churches, and have set many an intelligent man "to thinking"; have aroused his interest in the questions which were called and answered.

Spiritualism is really the master here. Indeed, how shall we say otherwise than that the popular religions are all properly brought under the term that is appropriated for one sect. If I believed in a conscious intermediate state, and the inherent immortality of an essence within us called soul, and constituting the conscious part of man, I would be either a Roman Catholic or a Spiritualist. It seems to me I could not escape one or the other, as an honest, logical conclusion for my practice. Spiritualism and Universalism are the names of the real creeds in our churches. It is true that some old-fashioned Presbyterians believe only in the universal salvation of Presbyterians, and still find a grand element in their ghostly comfort to be the confident expectation of witnessing the eternal writhing in a brimstone fire of all who are not synodically elect. I confess I have an intense contempt for men who persist in teaching the old fables. But if some man of love and unction would come among us and preach the truth as it is, I should be enabled to overcome this unwholesome feeling. I could pass to satisfaction, because the lies were challenged, and the heathen dogmas turned aside.

The people here who are not linked in sects, strictly speaking, are remarkable for candor and liberality of thought. Altogether, it does seem right to commend the time and the field. When the Mission Board next assemble, let the petition have a few moments' consideration. Yours very truly, C. A. S.

For the World's Crisis.

BABYLON IS FALLEN.

Many years have rolled away since the Popes became temporal sovereigns, and it seemed that many more might have witnessed the pontiff exercising himself as a priest-king, had it not been for that other saying, which reads, "They shall take away his dominion." The same Gabriel that uttered these words, as recorded by Daniel, repeated the matter more fully to John on Patmos: "These shall make her desolate," and when thus desolate, and stripped, and fallen, she shall be burned with fire. Ancient Babylon fell when "Darius the Median took the kingdom"; mystic Babylon must fall when the ten kings enter the eternal city and strip his pontifical majesty of all his dominion; but not till now could it be truthfully said, "Babylon is fallen." There is not a beast, or government, to support her. She stands before the world to-day fallen, stripped and naked. Hallelujah!

In a diplomatic circular of the Italian prime minister, Visconti Venosta, dated Florence, Oct. 18th, is the following: "Sir, The inhabitants of the Roman provinces, having acquired the liberty of giving solemn expression to their will, have declared in favor of the annexation of Rome and its territory to the constitutional monarchy. * * * * This vote, completed with all the safeguards of sincerity and publicity, is the last consecration of Italian UNITY. * * * * Rome, henceforth, is united to Italy by the national right which, expressed first by parliament, has found in the vote of the Romans its final sanction. * * * Thus you will have seen by the reply of the Roman deputation that Italy feels all the grandeur and responsibility which she assumes in declaring that the temporal power of the holy father has ceased to exist. [Amen.] * * The temporal power of the holy see was the last relic of the institution of the middle ages." "Blessed is he that readeth and they that hear the words of this prophecy." "Babylon is fallen"! Jesus is coming.

Correspondence.

From Bro. B. W. Davis.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—Having met many of you at our annual gathering for the first time, I rejoice to know that our Father has so large a family, who are looking for his appearing and kingdom. It has not been but about two years since I embraced the blessed hope; but I feel strong in the faith of soon seeing all of Father's family in our Eden home. Many of us met in camp, and were strengthened in the "present truth"; but there are very many who could not meet there, and to you are these few words sent.

O, it would have done you good to have been there and heard such blessed preaching; but, thank God, we soon shall all meet in the everlasting kingdom. "The last day, that great day of the feast," there were twelve or fifteen thousand present. It was a feast indeed. The blessed truth of Jesus' soon coming again, to put an end to sin and sorrow, set up his everlasting kingdom, raise the dear ones now sleeping in the grave, and take us and them to be forever with him, is cheering and comforting to the weary pilgrim, for it is our only hope of ever meeting them again. Bless the Lord for this hope. Let us keep ready, waiting, and looking for the coming and glorious appearing of our blessed Savior.

I want him to come, and am expecting he will soon appear. My prayer is, Come quickly; even so, come, Lord Jesus. If we really desire him to come, we must be ready; for it is only the pure ones that shall dwell with him. May the Lord help us to come out from this world, and be ready. Yours in the "blessed hope," B. W. Davis.

Rumney, N. H.

From Bro. J. H. F. Varney.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to thank the dear brethren and sisters who have so kindly aided me in my late sickness; and as I cannot do so personally, I ask that you will allow me to do so through the Crisis. I was taken last spring with what my physicians called "brain and nerve exhaustion," caused by mental and physical overwork. I lay completely prostrated all summer, unable to read, write, talk, think, pray, or walk. I had employed two of the best physicians in the State, and they, after doing all in their power to do, finally decided that I never could recover. In this condition, I was found by Dr. C. H. Johnson, of Boston. As I did not send for him, and as I had almost made up my mind to die, I really felt sorry that he had come, for it sounded like presumption to hear him talk about my going a mile to visit my wife's folks in a week, when I had been unable to walk all summer. But to please my wife, I consented for him to treat me, and instead of waiting a week, I made the visit the next day. Since then I have gained rapidly, so that now I am better than for three years, at which time this trouble commenced. I have no words to express my admiration of Bro. Johnson's astonishing skill as a physician; or love for his kindness and sympathy as a dear Bro. in Christ. And oh, what can I do to express my gratitude to my kind heavenly Father for all his mercies.

To the afflicted, let me say, that Bro. Johnson's office is No. 50 Hanover St., Boston; residence No. 8 Grove St., Chelsea. Many thanks to the loved ones in Christ for their kindness to me and mine. I ask their prayers for my guidance in the future, that I, with them, may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. J. H. F. Varney.

From Sr. E. A. Pierce.

Bro. Grant:—Although we are strangers to each other, yet I trust we are children of our Father. I felt as if I would like to tell you how good the Lord has been to me, in leading me where I have found the true light in relation to subjects on which we, as a people, differ from other churches; such as, "immortality only through Christ," and the "sleep of the dead." I had always been taught, and believed, that "the souls of believers are at their death made perfect in holiness, and do immediately pass into glory; their bodies, being still united to Christ, do rest in their graves till the resurrection." Now, such a doctrine seems very absurd. I had not been satisfied for some time before going to the Advent church. I felt as if I wanted something more real than I had experienced, but after going there a few times, I found just the light I wanted. It opened to me the blessed Bible as a new book. I have found a reality, something I can grasp and understand; but I feel as if there was a great deal to learn, especially in relation to prophecy, for I am only a babe in this blessed way, —only seven months have I rejoiced in a personal heavenly Father.

May the light from his word shine upon many more hearts, that they may see where they are living in these last days of probation. May we all be ready for that glorious change which is promised to those that prove faithful. May God help those of us who profess to be his children, and give us grace to be more like him, that when he comes to restore paradise, we may be found worthy to enter in and dwell with him forever.

Your sister in Christ, E. A. Pierce.

P. S.—I have felt so strong an attachment to your paper, that I wished to express my gratitude in some way. I always welcome it as a dear friend, and hope I shall have the pleasure of reading it till Jesus comes.

Worcester, Mass., Oct. 16th. E. A. P.

Bro. R. R. York writes:—"The Lord has blessed us abundantly within a few weeks. Nearly one hundred have been forward for prayers, and many of them, we trust, converted. Twenty have been baptized, and are full of joy and peace. Others will go forward soon. Blessed be the name of the Lord."

Obituaries.

Little. Died, of consumption, in Colebrook, N. H., Oct. 25th, 1870, Lovina W., wife of James C. Little, aged thirty-two years.

No one, perhaps, ever battled more bravely with disease than this dear sister, for she loved to live; not for the enjoyment of worldly pleasure, but for the cause of Christ and friends. She was known as a sincere and devoted christian, always ready to speak of the "blessed hope" in public or private, and be foremost, if need be, among the few that believed. Her plans were laid to spend the coming winter at the south in mission work, hoping in a milder climate to rise above her disease, but she was forced to give them up. Then, with sadness, yet sweet submission, she gave directions concerning her funeral, and bidding a last good bye to her husband, she fell asleep, and with her it is well.

For now she is calmly waiting,
Under the silent sod,
Long life and rest in the kingdom,
Beneath the smile of God.

Bro. Little is full of grief. Not long ago, all earthly possessions were swept away by a raging fire, and yet he says all this is nothing, could he have Lovina back. May the arm of the Lord sustain him, and his promises be a solace in these days of trial. The funeral was attended by the writer, in company with Eld. C. Shattuck and the Congregationalist clergyman of the place.

J. Albert Libby.

Hackett. Died, in Dover, N. H., of consumption, Nov. 21st, 1870, Ellen Francena, eldest daughter of J. M. and Mary A. G. Hackett, aged twenty-eight years.

Nature had endowed her with an amiable disposition, an intelligent mind, and a true and conscientious heart. At the age of about nineteen, the death of a brother was the means under God of her conviction and conversion. She was baptized at Alton Bay, and ever after lived an exemplary life. Her faith in the soon coming of Christ was unshaken. In the family she was its monitor, and a bright ornament to her profession. During her sickness she was patient and uncomplaining, and in her expiring moments said, "Mother, don't fail to meet me at the marriage supper of the Lamb."

Thus cruel death robs us of the sweetest flowers in the family vase, hiding them away in the cold grave, where they rest among the sainted host until the bright morning, when the mighty Resurrector's voice shall be heard in the deep caverns of earth's charnel house, and awake to a glorious re-living the purchase of Messiah's blood.

J. Couch.

Philbrick. Died, in Rye, Oct. 17th, 1870, Bro Josiah W. Philbrick, aged sixty-three years.

Also, Sept. 23d, 1870, Sarah A. Philbrick, wife of the above, aged sixty years and six months.

When the tidings of Christ's soon coming were heralded through New England, Bro. and Sister Philbrick were among its earliest advocates, and remained true and faithful to their posts of duty till death closed their warfare. They were loved and respected by a wide circle of friends, and died lamented by all. In this affliction, their children, a son and daughter, have lost christian parents, the church faithful and efficient laborers, and the community worthy citizens. But we trust they will live again at the resurrection of the just.

J. Couch.

Cook. Died, in Kingsbury, N. Y., Aug. 21st, 1870, Martha E., daughter of A. B. and E. Cook, aged twenty-one years.

The subject of this notice had early been taught the true principles of the Christian religion, to which her genial heart readily assented; and naturally possessing great amiability of character, with many rare gifts, especially music, she was a special favorite in society. Particularly in the sanctuary is she missed, where the melody of her voice joyously tuned forth the praises of God. During her sickness she seemed to consecrate herself more fully to Christ than heretofore, venturing to lean upon his sacred breast,

"And breathe her life out sweetly there."

Fond and loving parents would have held so goodly a treasure, had not the providence of God, to which they have happily learned to submit, decided otherwise. But they laid her away in hope of meeting her all improved by immortality, when the Lord shall descend with a shout, the voice of the archangel and trump of God. B. M.

Cook. Died, in Poultney, Vt., Oct. 7th, 1870, Mrs. Lucretia Streeter, mother of Bro. A. B. Cook, aged seventy-eight years. B. M.

Styles. Died, in Eauclair, Eauclair Co., Wis., Dec. 30th, 1868, Frederick G. Styles, aged twelve years, nine months, and twenty-nine days.

Also, in Augusta, Eauclair Co., Wis., Nov. 3d, 1870, Stella L. Styles, aged twenty-two years, one month, and eight days.

These were the dear and only children of Bro. and Sr. D. G. and P. C. Styles, formerly of Jamaica, Vt. The writer was with Stella in her last sickness, which was very short. She fell calmly and sweetly into the arms of her Savior, trusting to be gathered in the morn of the first resurrection. Words of comfort were administered by the writer, from Isaiah 61: 1,—"He hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound." Geo. W. Turner.

P. S. The parents desire the "Herald of Life" and "Advent Christian Times" to copy. G. W. T.

Pendleton. Died, in Willimansett, Aug. 30th, 1870, Elsie C., wife of Rodney Pendleton, aged fifty-eight years.

Our sister had long cherished the blessed gospel hope; and while that awful disease (cancer) was steadily preparing her "as food for worms," and her body to mingle with its mother dust, still she, with Job, believed that in her flesh she should yet see God, and that for herself, and not another. Such was the comforting hope of Sr. Pendleton in all her sufferings. The writer tried to comfort her surviving friends, and to instruct an attentive and candid audience relative to the same.

A. M. H.

Rowell. Died, in Hereford, Canada East, Sept. 6th, 1870, of consumption, Maria A., daughter of Wellman and Hannah Rowell, aged twenty-five years and eleven months.

Maria was a good, kind sister, and we all miss her much. We hope she will have a home in that beautiful land, where

"Pain and sickness ne'er will enter."

M. A. Rowell.

Marshall. Died, in Bradford, N. H., Sr. Marshall, wife of Joseph Marshall.

She will remain at rest till the last trumpet sounds, and then be raised to put on immortality.

Veazey. Died, in New Hampton, N. H., May 27th, 1870, Simeon Veazey, aged seventy-four years.

Bro. Veazey had been a believer in the soon coming of the Lord for many years. We hope to meet him in the resurrection morning. He leaves an aged wife, three sons and two daughters, to mourn their loss. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer, from Job 14: 14, assisted by Brn Evans and Brown. N. Glidden.

Deyo. Died, of consumption, in Charles City, Floyd Co., Iowa, Nov. 17th, 1870, Charles M. Deyo, youngest son of Elder S. D. Deyo, and brother of Elder P. S. W. Deyo, aged twenty years, nine months, and eight days.

The afflicted friends have hope in Jesus, that he will come again from the land of the enemy. The writer was called to administer words of comfort, which he did from Job 14: 14.

Alonzo Raymond.

Bean. Died, in Sangerville, Me., Oct. 29th, 1870, Keziah, wife of the writer, aged twenty-four years, one month, and eight days.

She fell asleep with the bright prospect of soon coming forth, clad with immortality and eternal life. Believing that it is well with her, the afflicted ones wait patiently for the great Life-giver to appear, when he will ransom her from the power of the grave. Geo. W. Bean.

Patterson. Died, in Pittsburg, N. H., Nov. 27th, 1870, Fanny, only daughter of Hiram and Persis Patterson, aged four years and four months.

Words of comfort were spoken by the writer.

For the World's Crisis.

ALLANSON RICHMOND.

On Friday evening, Oct. 28th, 1870, after a long and painful illness, Bro. Allanson Richmond fell asleep in Christ, at his residence at East Granger, N. Y., aged seventy-eight years.

He was the son of Perez Richmond, and was born in Westboro, Mass., close by the sea-side, being the youngest but one of thirteen children, only one of whom survives him. When he was in his eleventh year, his father was killed by a fall from a horse, and the home of his childhood was broken up, the family removing to Newport, R. I. He there became a manufacturer, and for several years pursued his business in Providence, until 1823, when, attracted by the superior advantages of a new country, he removed to western New York, and about the year 1835 settled in East Granger, where he remained till the close of his life.

In the year 1824, he was convinced of sin, and led to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ; and from that time, according to the ability that God gave him, he strove to labor in the Master's vineyard, to secure the welfare and salvation of those around him. He was subsequently licensed as a local preacher among the people called Methodists, and as opportunity afforded he endeavored to preach righteousness in the great congregation, and proclaimed to the lost and perishing repentance towards God, and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ.

In the philanthropic enterprises of the time in which he lived, he was deeply interested, laboring long and zealously in the cause of temperance, and being one of the first and most active movers in the agitations and discussions which arose upon the question of human bondage and human rights; hoping and toiling on, through hours of darkness and reproach, he preached, and labored, and waited, and prayed, until he saw the triumph of the principles he had advocated in the breaking of the yoke of bondage, and bidding the oppressed go free.

But his interest was not confined to questions of temporal freedom and prosperity. Much as he prized the liberty of those who are made free in Christ, and being led to separate himself from human organizations, he acknowledged Jesus as his Master and his King, and looked forward to that more glorious liberty of the sons of God, for which the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain.

The writer's acquaintance with Bro. Richmond and his family was formed at a meeting held in the Bethel Tent, in Alleghany county, N. Y., where he, with his family, enjoyed and participated in the exercises connected with the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom of God. Those hours of fellowship have been a pleasant memory, though we have not since met, nor shall we, until the day break, and the shadows flee away.

His disease (ossification of the arteries) was slow, and extremely painful; but through all his terrible agony he manifested the patience and meekness of a follower of Christ. For fourteen weeks, he endured such sufferings as are seldom meted out to the sons of men. But at last the end came. As life was fast ebbing away, the pressure of his dying hand gave answer to his wife that he still felt the presence of the Savior, though his tongue could no more speak his praise nor testify his love. And so, calmly, quietly and peacefully he passed away, leaving his neighbors to lament the departure of a good man and a true and valued friend; and the companion of his joys and sorrows, with her two orphan daughters, to mourn a husband and a father's loss.

May the great Consoler, who not only shed his tears over human sinfulness in Jerusalem, but also over human sorrow by the grave of Lazarus at Bethany, and who has as his appointed mission "to comfort all that mourn," graciously condescend to guide and keep, to preserve and provide for these bereaved ones, who now can grasp the many promises they never claimed before, even the promises made by him who is "a Father of the fatherless, and a Judge of widows, in his holy habitation"; and may they, in their hour of trial, be enabled to look beyond the storms and shadows of this dreary world, to the eternal morning when the dead shall awake and sing, and the ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads. In that day may the broken bonds be reknit, and the broken circle gathered together once more.

"He shall sleep, but not forever;
There will be a glorious day.
We shall meet to part, no, never,
When earth's shadows flee away."

H. L. H.

☞ The ladies of Trinity M. E. Church, well known for their sumptuous entertainments, will serve an oyster supper to-morrow evening, in the lecture room of Calvary Presbyterian church, corner of Indiana avenue and Twenty-second street, for the benefit of the Furnishing Fund of their new and elegant church. Supper from six to nine o'clock. They hope to see a full rally of all persons interested in the enterprise.

☞ Beecher says that "Our Protestant churches, with successive years, are getting to be merely lecture associations, for the maintenance of a course of Sunday lectures."

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

London, Nov. 29. A dispatch is received here from Berlin announcing that Prince Wittgenstein, the Russian military agent in Paris, has been forbidden by Trochu to leave the city for fear he will betray its desperate condition.

Berlin, Nov. 30. The Queen has received the following from King William:

Tuesday, Nov. 29. Frederic Charles reports the complete defeat of the army of the Loire, in the battle of Monday, in which the French had the 20th corps, probably the 18th, and portions of the 15th and 16th corps engaged. A thousand French were found dead on the field, 4000 wounded and 1600 were taken prisoners.

General Aurelles is reported wounded. The German loss was 1000, among them a few officers.

The Herald's dispatch from Wilhelmshohe the 28th inst. reports Bazaine as saying that the current report, that as soon as Paris capitulates all the French Generals and prisoners will be convened at Cassel, under King William, was quite likely to be true, it being meant to reorganize the army, make peace and hush up cavil.

The report of the Empress' intended journey is not contradicted here.

Theline, the Emperor's Treasurer, and Raimbeau have passports ready to go to Paris immediately after the surrender.

London, Nov. 30. [New York World Special.] Letters by balloon from Paris, private letters from Versailles and dispatches from Berlin all concur in representing the prospects of the French as extremely gloomy.

The Germans, in late engagements with the Army of the Loire, lost enormously, still their positions have been maintained.

The efforts of General Aurelles to advance to the relief of Paris have failed.

The provisions of Paris are almost exhausted. Scarcely a fortnight's supply remains.

The Eastern question approaches a peaceful solution. It is confidently expected that a conference for its settlement will be held at London. London is in a pacific mood, and all parties feel sure of peaceful results.

London, Dec. 1. The Telegraph this morning says the feeling is becoming universal throughout England, that the French war is rapidly drawing to a close. It is believed that the apparent impossibility of combining and concentrating the French armies will soon compel the surrender of Trochu.

Prominent members of the Ministry are urging the immediate calling of a convention to settle the Russian question and arrange and adopt a peace policy for Prussia and France.

A Startling Rumor.

The Times to-day revives the story that terms of peace have been settled between King William and Napoleon, by which the latter cedes Strasbourg and Metz, and returns to France at the head of the Imperial army. The Times editorially declares this highly probable.

The position of the Germans is now so embarassing as to render Bismarck anxious to escape on any terms.

Tours, Dec. 1. It is announced that General Ducrot, with 100,000 men, made a great sortie from Paris yesterday and crossed the Marne. The movement was completely successful. Details of the action are momentarily expected.

London, Dec. 1. The World's correspondent at Tours telegraphed on the 30th ult. that all was well with the Army of the Loire, and that the Prussian dispatches concerning fighting on the 28th were wholly fallacious. Gen. D'Aurelles holds well in hand in the immediate vicinity of Orleans the 15th, 16th, 17th and 18th army corps, in all 130,000 men. The right rear is formed of the 18th and 20th corps, of which Bourbaki now accepts the command, and is 67,000 strong. The whole of these forces concentrated during the recent fighting, and inflicted on the enemy a greater loss than they themselves suffered. There is perfect confidence in the ability of Gen. D'Aurelles to pierce the enemy's centre and to defeat his wings in detail.

King William's Dispatch.

Berlin, Dec. 2. King William sends the following dispatch to Queen Augusta, dated Versailles, on the 30th:

"The Sixth corps yesterday repulsed a sortie of the French near L'Huy, on the south of Paris. Over one hundred French prisoners were taken, and several hundred dead and wounded were left on the field. The French also made sorties on the positions of the Wurtemburgers and Saxons at Bamueil, Champigny and Selliers, to the east and southeast of Paris.

These positions were taken by the French, but were subsequently retaken by the Prussians. At the same time sorties were made north and west, and at St. Denis against the 4th corps and guard.

The French were repulsed and driven back behind their works in all cases. I remained at Versailles, as it was the central point.

(Signed) William.

Amiens Capitulated.

The French army in the North are in a state of disorganization.

The citadel in Amiens capitulated after a short resistance, in which the commander was killed and forty prisoners taken.

London, Dec. 2. [Special to the New York World.] The dispatches received this morning reconcile the conflicting German and French accounts of yesterday concerning Ducrot, with 150,000 men, and fifty cannon, succeeded in making his way out of Paris, and is now in the open country between the Marne and the Seine, southeast of Champigny. The Germans, who at first were driven from their positions, regained them, holding their intrenchments.

On Wednesday the combat recommenced. On Thursday morning the result was yet unknown. The German losses in the sorties on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday were 157 officers and 5800 men in killed and wounded. The French loss, as partially ascertained, was 3400. General Vinoy, with the First Corps, got wholly through the German lines on the south, and effected a junction with a portion of D'Aurelles' forces, advancing from the southwest. The siege of Paris is in effect raised, and the campaign turned against the Prussians.

Official dispatches announce that Trochu and Ducrot made a sortie with 150,000 men and completely routed the Prussians between Brie-sur-Marne and Chissy Le Roi. Ducrot is now encamped fifteen miles from Paris.

The Telegraph to-day says that the French have won a great advantage in the departments of the Seine and Marne, and now possess military preponderance never enjoyed by them since the opening of the campaign.

Advices from Paris to the 23d ult. say that the mortality is frightfully increasing, and that the calculation made shows that the provisions will last from ninety to one hundred days.

London, Dec. 3. By a sifting of the vast number of confused and contradictory war dispatches received up to a late hour this morning, the fact is undeniable that the French forces yesterday actually won a victory, as claimed, near Orleans, but the Germans certainly repulsed the French attack before Paris. It is not true that the French Army of the Loire effected a junction with Trochu, though the Prussian lines were repeatedly successfully pierced during the engagement. The bayonet charges of the French were exceedingly brilliant.

Tours, Dec. 5. Last night the French evacuated Orleans, and at midnight the Prussians occupied the town.

London, Dec. 5. England accepts the statement made in Gortschakoff's last note, that Russia's declaration of her intention to be no longer bound by an onerous arrangement, was an abrogation of a purely theoretical principle, without its immediate application. Mr. Granville also acknowledges Russia's disposition to submit her objections to the arbitration of a congress of the powers, and concludes by cordially recognizing her protestations of friendship.

DOMESTIC.

The Siamese Twins. A gentleman who recently met the Siamese twins, Chang and Eng, at their home in North Carolina, informs the New York Sun that Chang, who was struck with paralysis of the right side, in August last, has gained steadily in general health, but his right leg continues useless. This, however, does not prevent the twins from going about and attending to their ordinary avocations. Those who have seen this curious pair will recollect that Eng stands on the right or off side, and Chang on the left, and that the inside arm of each is usually thrown around the other's back or neck. In their present condition the way they manage to move from place to place is this: Chang ties up his right or inside leg in a sling, and with the support given him by a crutch under the left shoulder, and the aid of his brother's arm finds no difficulty in making his way around the plantation as easily as ever.

The most singular thing about this extraordinary case is the fact that during the whole of Chang's severe and dangerous illness Eng has been in unusually good health and spirits, not excepting the time during which he was confined to his brother's sick bed. He has no wish to be disunited from Chang, even if he could be convinced that the operation would be free from inconvenience or danger; and a son recently remarked to a friend that he did not believe that his father would ever consent to a separation should Chang die first.

Distinguished medical authorities have differed in regard to the practicability of separating the twins by a surgical operation, though the general opinion has been that it might be accomplished with safety. Some have supposed that the fact that the brothers have but a single umbilicus, which is situated in the middle of the ligature that unites them, indicates a conversion in the circulation of the blood through the two bodies which would render an operation dangerous, but the circumstances attending Chang's illness seem to dispose of this objection.

Items.

☞ The steamer Cambria, which arrived at New York yesterday, it is said brought two thousand letters that left Paris by balloon.

☞ Seventy-five bushels of apples, of fair quality, were sold by auction a few days since, in Grafton, Vt., for one cent a bushel.

☞ Since the beginning of the present century, one hundred and twelve planets have been discovered between Mars and Jupiter. Of this number nearly one third have been discovered by American astronomers.

☞ Street cars, moved by compressed air, are running in Chicago. At the trial trip on Saturday, one of them went three miles and a quarter in thirty minutes, with an initial pressure of one hundred and twenty-five pounds to the square inch.

CHRIST'S LOVE.

"The love of Christ constraineth us."

Jesus, the friend of friendless men,
The help of all the weak;
Jesus, who left the joys of heaven,
The lost and sad to seek,—

Jesus, thy love has found my heart,
And raised it up to thee;
Jesus, that love doth feast my soul,
'Tis present heaven to me.

Jesus, thy death my life doth prove,
Thy cross to thrones doth bring;
Jesus, thy crown shall be the crown
Of all who own thee King.

O rule me by thy love, my Lord,
Thy love to me when dead;
The love so passing all my thoughts,
That for my love it bled.

Jesus, I long to yield my love
In deeds that shall thee praise;
Jesus, I long to live that love.
Through life of endless days.

—Selected by B. W. Davis.

"GREAT EVENTS ARE ON THE GALE."

A MISSIONARY TRACT.

The first apostasy from "The truth as it is in Jesus," was the prostration of the human intellect before men of like passions with ourselves. It took the form of a vile superstition, which attained its meridian altitude in the ecclesiastical polity of Rome. But "men of the world, wiser in their generation than the children of light," have unconsciously been helping the church to escape from this yoke of bondage. The bonds of superstition are relaxed by the greater diffusion of knowledge, and by the greater freedom of thought vindicated for us in all our civil institutions. Despotism is everywhere giving way before our eyes—Civil and Ecclesiastical Despotism. The earth (as was foretold) has been helping the woman; and we believe, with assured confidence, that which is written in the volume of the Book, that the thing which decays and waxes old is about to vanish away.

But let us not imagine that our warfare is over, or that we have come to the place of our rest. As the first apostasy from "the truth as it is in Jesus," was the prostration of the intellect, we are forewarned that the last will be the exaltation of the intellect, when men shall be lovers of themselves, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof. Believing nothing. Hoping nothing. Fearing nothing which cannot be demonstrated to the satisfaction of the feeble and finite understandings of foolish and presumptuous men.

Thus we are again in the old battle-field; the first trial of our obedience to our Creator is the last trial of our loyalty to our Redeemer. "Once more, then, into the breach, dear friends, once more;" and now and there let us dedicate, to our great and glorious Head, intellect and influence and wealth, and all the faculties God has given us, of whatsoever kind they be, not of constraint, but willingly. "Believe in me," says the Lord Jesus, "and ye shall be like me, and be with me where I am." "Believe in me," says the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience, "and ye shall be as God."

To the periodical press the public are indebted for their knowledge of the "signs of the times"—the signs in heaven above, and in the earth beneath—the signs in the natural and in the spiritual, in the moral, the social, and the political worlds. These signs of the times, faithfully and vividly portrayed morning by morning, and evening by evening, in the columns of the daily papers, are awfully ominous of approaching troubles. The oft-foretold great tribulation, which is to break in pieces the present order of things, and prepare the way for the introduction of another and a better, would appear to be close at hand. When we reflect seriously on the "signs of the times," which are daily recorded for our edification, and compare them with the signs revealed and recorded in our Bibles, as those which are to indicate the end of this age or dispensation, we cannot help being struck by their most accurate correspondence and parallelism. There is not one of them but has got his mate, literally and obviously displayed before us. Yet, seeing, we see not; and hearing, we hear not, and do not understand, because our hearts have waxed gross, through their entire pre-occupancy by the things of sense and time.

The present modes of acting by the Christian churches for the conversion of the world have been, to a considerable extent, effectual to the breaking down of the strongholds of Satan and of sin, especially in India, but have done very little in building up a Christian church of the disrupted materials. For proof we refer to the annual missionary reports, and especially to the report of the mission with which we are best acquainted—a mission whose praise is in all the churches, the usages of which other churches have to a great extent imitated and adopted.

In the report for this year of the India Mission of the Free Church, we find that in Bengal, since the commencement of the mission in 1820, only two hundred and twenty of the heathen millions have been added, on profession, to the church.

In Madras, the number admitted on profession, since the establishment of the mission in 1837, has been one hundred and sixty-seven.

In Nagpore, one hundred and sixty-three have been admitted since the commenement of the mission, in 1844.

And in Western India, the oldest of all our missions, one hundred and ninety-seven have only been admitted, on profession, since the commencement of the mission in 1829. While to the melancholy fact our missionaries are constrained to testify, that many whose heads have been so garnished with secular and scientific knowledge, that the absurdities of heathenism have been swept clean away out of their understandings, and their hearts have, from the want of all faith in the supernatural, become tenfold more the children of the devil than they were before.

Think you that the church militant—the soldiers of the cross—would be thus playing at soldiery, were they looking for the return among them of the Captain of their salvation, and his reward with him, to give to every one according to his work? Were the cry heard, "Behold, he cometh with ten thousand of his saints," would there not be a stir among the dry bones? would not the most indolent and indifferent be up and doing—attempting to do what they never did before? would not many be running to and fro, preaching and teaching the gospel of our salvation, since it is written, "Blessed are they whom the Lord at his coming shall find so doing"? We are not, however, instructed to expect an audible voice to arouse us from our lethargy. We are instructed to look to "the signs of the times." When ye see these things come to pass, know that he is near. When these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads. Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they that pierced him shall mourn (who have not fled for refuge to the hope set before them in the gospel), and cry to the mountains and to the hills to cover them from his sight. But they shall cry in vain, for every thing is open and naked to his view, nor is there any thing whatsoever concealed from his knowledge.

We all confess that the signs of the times are ominous; but while we make this confession, do we not shut our eyes, that they may not see them; and close our ears, that they may not hear them; and pre-occupy our hearts with other things, so that we may neither feel nor fear them? Now, all that we contend for is, that as we have been informed, on an authority we profess to believe, that certain signs will indicate to them who are looking for him, that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh, we should be looking for them with eager and anxious expectation, since to them that look for him we are told he will appear the second time, without sin, unto salvation.

We, however, by no means insist that the signs of the times indicate what we hope and believe them to do. Let every man examine them for himself; we only insist on the wisdom and duty of looking at them by the light of revelation, and the certainty of finding that in the simple performance of this duty, there is great reward. No exercise can more elevate the mind above the sordid, sensual, and all-engrossing selfishness of worldly pursuits than the study of the signs of the times, as revealed to us in our Bibles. It would kindle in our hearts a universal benevolence. . . It would cause us to love our neighbors as ourselves; to do good and communicate to the uttermost ends of the earth. We do not presume to dogmatise, nor to assert, nor to impose conclusions—we only desire that men should attend to the signs of the times attentively, compare what is with what was predicted, so that they may see and know where they are, and whereunto they are tending, otherwise it is certain that sudden destruction must come upon them. We would direct attention to the signs of the times, not for the gratification of a presumptuous inquisitiveness, but from the necessity of the case; for if He that cometh is at hand with ten thousand of his saints to subdue his enemies under him, to purge thoroughly his floor, and to burn the chaff with unquenchable fire, we, professing believers in Jesus, under an enhanced sense of our responsibilities and our duties, becoming more seriously affected ourselves, should strive to associate with ourselves as many as we can in the work of doing good and communicating. To recall the alienated; to cheer the diffident; to comfort the mourner; to assist the poor over the gulf of despond which separates one section of the community from another, with enmity and jealously subdued, would be as life from the dead to the world; while a restoration in our churches of such a communion of saints as existed at the beginning, a communion based on the condition, "Ye are all brethren," would manifest before all men by the fruits of the Spirit, that the Spirit was in us, and among us, of a truth. Were the church, instead of employing her all-pervading machinery for the gathering of money, to employ it for the gathering in of the men and women of our congregations, into congregational associations for making Christ's ways known upon the earth, and his saving health to others, we are assured by the same word of promise, that if we thus seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, all other needful things will be added unto her and unto us. We commit both a sad blunder and a sad crime—and the crime worse far than the blunder—when we seek first the money wherewith to procure the righteousness, instead of first seeking the righteouness wherewith to procure the money which would flow from believing and loving hearts willingly and abundantly, according to our need.

This is what might have been had the church been zealous and faithful; but while the Lord delayed his coming, we all slumbered and slept; and now, when men's hearts are failing them for fear, and for looking after the things which are coming upon the earth, we know not anything that would so much solemnize and tranquilize; and both to solemnize and tranquilize were never so much needed as now, when the universal passion and practice is after the frivolous and exciting. The solemnity of the subject would solemnize, and what can be more tranquilizing to all believers than the declaration—"When these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh"?

To permit the heirs of salvation to come out and to be separate, and to flee from the wrath to come, a brief space of repose, such as we enjoy at present, is one of the predicted signs of the times—"There was silence in heaven [it is written] for half-an-hour" of celestial computation; what may be its duration, according to terrestrial reckoning, it is not given us to know. But this we know, that of the day and hour of Christ's coming knoweth no man. The angel also, as seen by John ascending from the east, cried out with a loud voice to the angels holding the four winds of heaven—"Hurt not the earth," etc., etc. (Rev. 8: 3) "till I have sealed the servants of God on their foreheads." The Lord is waiting to be gracious. He is unwilling that any should perish. The Lord, who will be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, to take vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, is still waiting to be gracious. "Turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die?"

Watchman, what of the night? Watchman, what of the night? The watchman said—"The morning cometh, and also the night." The morning cometh! The Sun of righteousness is about to arise, with healing in his wings. The coming of the Lord draweth nigh. And also the night! Then the Lord shall whet his glittering sword, to take vengeance on all his enemies, and to reward them that hate him; when the light of the wicked shall be put out, and the blackness of darkness prevail. We are assuredly on the verge of a great revolution in the affairs of men, when old things are to pass away, and all things to become new.

Who is on the Lord's side? Who? "Come out from among them, and be ye separate," is the commandment of the Lord.—Rainbow.

FAITH IN AFFLICTION.

"For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."—2 Cor. 4: 17.

It is nearly an impossibility for human short-sightedness to view the afflictions of life in any other light but that of misfortune. And none, but with an eye of faith, can see as did the apostle, that "our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Murmuring doubt and unbelief sees only a dreary and continual night; while faith reverses this, and sees the night short and the day eternal; and its wonderful power is never more beautifully manifested than when by its strength the sinking heart is brought to rely with a holy, loving trust on God. That recognizes the ministries of sorrow in the light of christian truth, as a discipline that will fit us for a higher life; that, like the Captain of our salvation, we may be made "perfect through suffering."

God does not willingly grieve his children. Only in unbounded love does he ever afflict them,—that love that is unwilling any should perish. But that, in compliance to his divine will, they may yield themselves obedient, various and mysterious ways are employed, none of which are more effectual in strengthening and purifying the heart than the chastening rod of affliction. Many, that were wanderers from the fold, have thus been gathered in. They have seen their brightest hopes and prospects blasted; learned the worthlessness and frailty of human sympathy, and turned from earth aside to find in a spirit of low and loving trust that rest and consolation the world cannot give.

This was the bitter cup prepared by the Father, and drank by the Son to its very dregs; who, wavering but a moment, to his disciple said, "The cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?" And think ye that the followers of that meek and suffering Savior can pass the bitter draught untasted by? Can we desire a baptism into his Holy Spirit, and a daily walk by his side, with a wish to refuse a share of the trials and hardships he suffered so keenly? No, if we would reign with him, we too must suffer. Count no sacrifice too great that will in any manner glorify his righteous name. And, finally, like him we must yield in a spirit of pious submission to any chastisement our heavenly Father may see fit to inflict. And though the experience may prove a most bitter one, we may rest assured that "Christ leads us through no darker way

Than he hath trod before."

DON'T SWEAR.

Young man, don't swear. It is ungentlemanly; it is low and degrading. Do you think it sounds any better to preface or conclude a remark with an oath? You are very much mistaken, if you do think so. I am of the opinion that most people swear, not because they think it sounds well, but it has become a habit. To such I say, break off at once; it is easier now than it will be hereafter. It is considered very impolite to use an oath in the presence of ladies; and yet you dare to use the most horrible oaths in the presence of the Almighty.

Swearing drives away the purer thoughts. Drunkenness is a common evil; but who ever saw a man who drank, but did not swear? Virtue and vice do not journey hand in hand; therefore, "cease to do evil; learn to do well."

A few evenings since, in company with some friends, I went down to a wharf near this place, to fish; and while there, I heard two persons swearing fearfully. They were quite a distance from where we stood, yet I could hear nearly every word they uttered. On inquiry, I found that one of them was a boy, about ten years of age. He first learned to swear, and afterwards to drink the poison that makes the man a fool. Think of it; and keep from shuddering if you can—a boy ten years of age—drunk; yes, drunk, and cursing God too.

Parents, let me say a word to you. Make home a pleasant place, a cheerful place. Do not force the little ones to sit still, and not to speak until some one speaks to them. Teach them to love home, and if possible provide things for their amusement, and your children will not seek improper and wicked places of amusement. With the influence of a happy home, they will grow up to be a blessing, not a curse. J. B. WELLS.

POLITENESS TO STRANGERS.

Reader, when you see a stranger in the vestibule of your church, do not pass him coldly by with the thought that the sexton will see to him, but speak to him yourself, give him a seat in your pew if you have room; if not, give him a good seat, and at the close of the service, seek him out, invite him to come again, tell him about the Sabbath-school and the prayer-meeting, make him acquainted with the prominent men of your church, and show the stranger that you feel an interest in him. You may gain an earnest worker; and you certainly will do your duty. And this duty applies to the ladies also. It must be very embarrassing to a lady to go to a strange church and to be looked curiously at, her dress commented upon in tones loud enough to reach her ears, and no one except the sexton offer to show her a seat, or in any manner take any interest in her. It certainly would be sufficient to drive some people to another church and a more social people. Ladies, if you can in any way show courtesy to a stranger, do it; and in no place is it so much needed as in our churches. 'Tis a small thing to pass a hymn-book to the stranger in the pew near you, who is sitting without one; but he appreciates it. 'Tis but a little act to ask that young lady, who has come here for the first time, to come and join your class in the Sabbath school; but it shows her you have an interest in her as a stranger, and would be her friend. There are so many ways which will suggest themselves to every reader, by which he or she can show the strangers that they are welcome, that I will not enumerate them. That this matter is of importance can easily be learnt. On inquiry, I have found that many families have made their decision as to what church they would go, from the treatment received the first time they attended service at a particular church.

After strangers decide to come to your church, see that they know every one. Let there be no distinction as to position in society or color, but let them feel they are among brothers and sisters. And when a stranger comes to your prayer meeting for the first time, look after him. And at all social gatherings seek out the strangers and make them feel at home; do not introduce them to everybody at once, as is the custom in some places;—a stranger, after running this gauntlet, comes away with very curious ideas of whom he has met, or their names; but gradually make him acquainted with [illegible], and be sure and let him meet your pastor. He will know, in a few moments, just what hands to put him into, to make him at home. Children, look after the stranger boys and girls; get them into your Sabbath school, and thus benefit them and yourself, your church, and your school. Politeness to strangers should be cultivated more than it is, and more attention should be paid to it by all. May these suggestions lead you to think of these things, and profit thereby.—Zion's Herald.

7s. & 6s.

O my Savior, thou who art
The sinner's faithful friend,
When shall every waiting heart,
To meet thee, all ascend?

When shall all the tempted ones
Behold thy lovely face,
And the echo, "Jesus comes,"
Be heard in every place?

When shall every weeping eye
From tears be ever free?
And the weary ones that cry,
Their great Deliverer see?

Hasten, Lord, that glorious day,
When saints no more shall roam;
When our sorrows pass away,
And Jesus says, "come home."

Then shall shouts of victory loud,
Burst forth upon the ear;
When with joy th' exultant crowd
Behold their King appear!

Then our toils will all be o'er,
Our sorrows all be past;
We shall mourn and sigh no more,
For we've reached our home at last.

PASS IT ALONG.

The pith of the following is too full of good common sense to be lost. Pass it along to your neighbor.—ED.

COMFORTING INTERPRETATION.

A correspondent of the Janesville Gazette, writing from Magnolia, Washington Co., Wis., gives the following "as illustrative of the custom of taking the Holy Scriptures for what we deem them worth, instead of what they really say."

One who does not believe in immersion for baptism, was holding a protracted meeting, and one night preached on the subject of baptism. In the course of his remarks, he said: Some believe it necessary to go down into the water, and come up out of it, to be baptized. But this he claimed to be a fallacy, for the preposition "into," of the Scriptures, should be rendered differently, as it does not mean into at all times. "Moses," he said, "we are told, went up into the mountain, and the Savior was taken into a high mountain, etc. Now we do not suppose that either went into the mountain, but upon it. So with going down into the water, it means simply going down close by or near to the water, and being baptized in the ordinary way, by sprinkling or pouring."

He carried this idea out fully, and in due season and style closed his discourse, when an invitation was given for any one so disposed to arise and express his thoughts. Quite a number of the brethren arose, and said they were glad they had been present on this occasion; that they were well pleased with the sound sermon they had just heard, and felt their souls greatly blessed. Finally a corpulent gentleman, of Teutonic extraction, a stranger to all, arose and broke a silence that was almost painful, as follows:

"Mister Breacher, I ish so glad I vash here to-night, for I has had explained to my mind some tings dat I neber could pelieve pefore. O, I ish so glad that into doesh not mean into at all, put shust close py or near to, for now I can pelieve manish tings vot I could not pelieve before. We reat, Mister Breacher, that Taniel was cast into the ten of lions, and came out alive! Now I neber could pelieve that, for de wilt peasts would shust eat him up right off; put now it ish very clear to my mind. He vash shust cast close py or near to, and tid not get into the ten at all. O, I ish so glad I vash here to-night!

Again, we reat dat to Hebrew children vas cast into de firish furnace, and dat air alwish look't like a peeg story, too, for they would have peen purnt up; put it ish all plain to my mind now, for they were shust cast near py or close to the firish furnace. O, I ish so glad I vas here to-night!

And den, Mister Breacher, it is said dat Jonah vash cast into the sea, and taken into the whalesh pelly. Now I neber could pelieve that. It alwaysh seemed to me to be a peeg feesh story, put it ish all plain to my mind now. He vash not taken into the whalesh pelly at all, put shust shumpt onto his pack and rode ashore. O, I ish so glad I vas here to-night!

And now, Mister Breacher, if you vill shust explain two more bashages of Scriptures, I shall pe, O, so happy dat I vash here to-night. One of them is, vere it saish de vicked shall pe cast into a lake that purns with fire and primsthone alwaysh. O, Mister Breacher, shall I pe cast into that lake if I am vicked? or shust close py, or near to, shust near enough to pe comfortable? O, I hopes you tell me I shall pe cast only shust py it a good vay off, and I vill pe so glad I vash here to-night!

The other bashage is that vich saish, 'Pleased are they who do these commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city.' O, tell me I shall gets into the city, and not shust close py or near to, shust near enough to see vat I have lost, and I shall pe so glad I vash here to-night!"

He sat down with the impression left on many minds present, that it would not do to take the Bible for only what it clearly says.

PATIENCE.

"For ye have need of patience."—HEB. 10: 36.

Who? The minister of the gospel. When? When he has preached to a congregation on the solemn subject of Jesus' coming in judgment, and a preparation to meet God; when sinners are under deep conviction, just on the point of confessing Jesus, and Bro. A. rises with his long testimony, not in the spirit of the meeting, nor in sympathy with it, but thinks it a good thing to do well, etc., and closes by saying, I am not in the work as I ought to be. The meeting falls. Bro. B. takes the floor, talks about the sleep of the dead, and finally closes by giving a piece on the perils of the last days, such as fairs and festivals, and ends by saying, Come out of Babylon.

The meeting still lowers. People begin to move around. Eyes are all dried, and look sad. Up jumps Bro. C., saying, When I left old Babylon (referring to some church he had left), I left all its dogmas, such as the immortal-soul doctrine, eternal misery, etc. He talks on this strain till all are pleased when he sits down. A good Bro. or Sr. has been groaning in spirit for sinners, and is about to rise to warn them to flee to Christ for refuge, when Bro. D., with his darling hobby, drives in ahead, and rides away awhile. Some go out. He finally closes by giving his views on tobacco. Meeting is now down to the freezing point, and the good Spirit all gone; the minds are all off from the important subject. The minister feels sad, and with a heavy heart says, We'll close with the benediction. Has he not need of patience? H. B. S[illegible].

THE HUSBANDMAN.

"My Father is the husbandman."—John 15: 1.

Blessed words which fell from those lips which spake as never man spake: "My Father is the husbandman." And how very careful he is of the tender trees he has planted. How he does every thing for their growth and strength and fruit-bearing. He knows just what little sins to nip off; just what must be stopped growing, that he may find fruit in abundance, ripe and delicious. He does it all as pleases his divine will; and we murmur at every affliction, because it is not joyous but grievous; knowing not that it worketh the fruits of righteousness.

We never know just how much sorrow we need to make us thankful for our benefits; how much affliction to humble the proud heart, which is an abomination unto God; just how much pruning from the divine hand of the great husbandman to cause us to bear fruit. But God knows that it is all needful; for we cannot enter into his kingdom save through much tribulation. And how much sweeter will be the rest after the fights and afflictions of this life. After they are all over and the crown is won at last, we shall count these light afflictions, which are but for a moment, as joy, if so be we win Christ, and are found in him.

Our husbandman is patient, and careful; coming year after year, and seeking fruit; and when he finds none, he will not yet pluck it up, but will still dig about it, that it may bear fruit. But if after all the careful labor, and the coming year after year, all unrewarded, he finds it still cumbering the ground, he will root it up, and it will be cast into the fire and burned. Beware, O fruitless tree! beware, O fruitless vine! lest coming at last, and finding no fruit; beware! beware! lest you be rooted up also. Beware that hand, kind and tender and loving, in truth, when the tender branches bear fruit; beware the anger of that hand, for our God is a consuming fire. O barren tree! your Master has come these many years seeking fruit, and finds none. None after these many years! Can you look for him joyfully, after these wasted years? Can you even meet him at all, when in the place of golden grain you bring nothing but leaves? withered leaves? Shall you not, with those who have never loved him, call on the rocks and mountains to fall on you, and hide you from his face? And can we meet our Master thus, bearing our withered sheaves?

Gems.

— Adversity is a poultice which reduces our vanity and strengthens our virtue. Even a boy never feels so good as when, after merited punishment, he reflects, repents, and resolves to do right in the future.

— The elementary spirit of the Bible is unreserved devotion to God.

Live to do good, and kindness show
To neighbor, stranger, friend and foe,
Nor think the task is hard;
Heaven will bestow its righteous meed,
And every earth-forgotten deed
Shall bring a rich reward.

— In wonder all philosophy began; in wonder it ends; and admiration fills up the interspace. But the first wonder is the offspring of ignorance; the last is the parent of adoration.

— By doing good with his money, a man as it were stamps the image of God upon it, and makes it pass current for the merchandise of heaven.

— Our salvation does not depend upon our having right notions about the devil, but right feelings about God.

Here we all must suffer, walking lonely
The path that Jesus once himself hath gone;
Watch thou in patience through the dark hour only,
This one dark hour, before the eternal dawn.

— I hate anything that occupies more space than it is worth. I hate to see a load of band-boxes go along the street, and I hate to see a parcel of big words without anything in them.

— Read not books alone, but men, and among them chiefly thyself; if thou find anything questionable there, use the commentary of a severe friend.

— There is this difference between happiness and wisdom. He that thinks himself the happiest man, really is so; but he that thinks himself the wisest, is generally the greatest fool.

— Time may be redeemed as it is passing, but never when it is gone by.

A frivolous word, a sharp retort,
Alas! that it should be so!
The petulant speech, the careless tongue,
Have wrought more evil, and done more wrong,
Have brought to the world more woe
Than all the armies age to age
Records on history's blood-stained page.

— Prayer is the weak man's refuge, and the strong man's hope; its power opens the heavens, and closes the yawning of the pit.

— When the ox is down, many are the butchers.

— Vex not yourself when ill spoken of. Contumelies not regarded, vanish; but repined at, argue either a puny soul or a guilty conscience.

— Meditation is the mother of devotion, but the daughter of retirement.

— We cannot doubt that the Bible is right if it has set us right.

If you can climb to the top without falling,
Do it. If not, go as high as you can;
Man is not honored by business or calling,
Business and calling are honored by man.

— Life has no value except in so far as we use it for perfecting our souls, for enriching our minds with noble qualities, and for spreading happiness around us.

— Sadness is but the minor key of joy.

— Weigh every step that you are about to take, whenever passions become involved.

— Let us adopt the love of peace, that Christ may recognize his own, even as we recognize him to be the teacher of peace.

— High houses are mostly empty in the upper story.

PRAY FOR THE PREACHERS.

If any need the prayers of christians it is the ambassadors of Jesus, who stand on the walls of Zion, proclaiming to the world the last great truth—the speedy coming of Christ. From every believing heart most fervid petitions should ascend the throne of grace, that God's blessing might rest down upon them.

There are many reasons for this. Since we are so near the consummation of our hope, we wish to have the preachers in earnest for the salvation of souls. Many have, no doubt, had their ardor chilled by the coldness and worldliness of the brethren, and are in need of the quickening power of Christ's Spirit. Unless they have it, their preaching will be in vain, and sinners will never be moved to repentance. It is sad for any christian to lose his spiritual life; more sad for a minister, because so many suffer loss by it.

How important that every preacher have the right spirit, and faith, and be filled with the Holy Ghost. When ministers are thus filled, their success is sure. Will we not, those of us who have access to the throne of grace, [illegible] have not before? If we will pray fervently for the watchmen, the Lord will answer, and they will begin to feel pressed as a "cart under sheaves." They will go forth weeping, bearing precious seed. The truth will be as fire in their bones, and men will confess that "God is with them of a truth." Who will pray for the preachers? Let us all do so till they are aglow in the Master's service.

Worcester, Mass. GEO. E. MERRILL.

CHRISTIAN EARNESTNESS.

John Knox, who prayed, "Lord, give me Scotland, or I die!" has been dead almost two hundred years; yet all Scotland feels his power still. Such earnestness is not soon forgotten.

George Muller began his work teaching one orphan child thirty-five years ago. He now has a church of nine hundred members, forty of whom go out every Sabbath afternoon and preach to ten thousand people around Bristol. He has also established missions abroad. When he needs money he asks God, and it comes.

A gentleman in Dublin, who is no talker, but has great wealth, keeps eight printing presses going, printing tracts, many of which he writes himself in seven different languages, and thus he is imparting gospel truth to multitudes.

A butcher in London, and a christian only seven years, began telling others what God had done for him, and the result was their salvation. He now has a chapel that holds fifteen hundred members. He has a large business, but preaches five nights in a week in the streets, in halls, and other places in the city.

A Mr. Carter, who labors among London thieves, burglars, and pick-pockets, has gathered a church of one thousand eight hundred members. His wife instructs one thousand six hundred mothers, meeting four hundred at a time, who, without her labors, would receive no religious instruction at all.

These instances show what men may do when fully consecrated to the work of saving souls. Were all professors thus earnest, the world would be given to Christ in a very few years.—Parish Visitor.

RIBBON THEOLOGY REBUKED.—Carlyle, if we are to credit uncertain story-tellers, is a hater of shams. At a small literary gathering, a lady of showy theology was bewailing the wickedness of the Jews in rejecting our Savior. She expressed regret that Christ had not come in our time, saying, "How delighted we should all be to throw our door open to him, and listen to his divine precepts! Don't you think so, Mr. Carlyle?" But the sturdy Scotchman, to her dismay, replied:

"No, madam, I think that, had he come very fashionably dressed, with plenty of money, and preaching doctrines palatable to the higher orders, I might have had the honor of receiving from you a card of invitation, on the back of which would be written, 'To meet our Savior;' but if he had come uttering his sublime precepts, and denouncing the Pharisees, and associating with the Publicans and lower orders, as he did, you would have treated him much as the Jews did, and would have cried out 'Take him to Newgate and hang him!'"—Telescope.

PRAYER.

Prayer leads us heavenward, and I believe that a praying soul will not be lost; but we must have divine love, and be made new creatures. As Christ said to Nicodemus, we must be born again. How blessed it is in all our trials and afflictions, that we can go to our closets and pray. Prayer gives relief to every christian heart. Prayer has healed the sick and raised the dead. How careful we should be about what we say or do. We must all watch and pray, that we enter not into temptation. It is my daily prayer that Christ will come soon. May we all be prepared to meet him. Hygiene.

"This is for your health."—PAUL.

THE STOMACH.

Dr. Dio Lewis, of Boston, has just published a valuable work, entitled "Talks about People's Stomachs," from which the following is selected:—

To regulate health we must regulate diet.

A large part of the food of Americans is composed of white flour, sugar, and butter. People who try to live upon such stuff gradually starve to death.

The reason that the American people are such dyspeptics is, that they eat and drink so much, and eat and drink so fast.

The teeth will not decay if they are kept clean. A toothbrush is a good thing, but one good toothpick is worth an armful of toothbrushes.

The process of digestion begins in the mouth and ends in the lungs. The mouth grinds the food; the lungs supply the oxygen which converts the products of the food into pure and useful blood.

Many people imagine themselves afflicted with serious diseases when they are only suffering from dyspepsia. A dyspeptic patient always despairs; a consumptive always hopes.

John Abernethy was the greatest man the medical profession has produced in modern times. Perhaps no other man has contributed so much to temperance in eating as he.

To make the best bread that can be made of wheat, obtain good wheat and grind it without bolting; mix it with cold water until it is as thick as can be well beaten with a spoon; after it is thoroughly beaten down, put it into a large iron pan, composed of many little ones, which must first be made hot; put it then quickly in a hot oven, and bake it as rapidly as possible.

Indian corn makes excellent nourishment. It contains a large amount of oil, has remarkable fattening qualities, and is likewise remarkable as a heat producer. Rice keeps its consumers fat, but it lacks the elements which feed the muscles and brain. Potatoes, both Irish and sweet, are very poor food for brain and muscle.

Of meats, the best for heat and fat are pork, mutton, lamb, beef, and veal; for muscle, beef, veal, mutton, lamb, and pork; for brain and nerve, beef, veal, mutton, lamb, and pork. In cold weather, fat meat, butter, and the like will keep the body warm; and in warm weather, milk, eggs, bran-bread, and summer vegetables will keep it cool.

The Greek and Roman armies eat but once a day.

The common impression that tomatoes are the healthiest of all vegetables, is a mistake. If eaten at all, it should be with great moderation and never raw. Tomatoes have sometimes produced salivation. Dr. Lewis knew a young woman who had lost all her teeth from excessive eating of tomatoes.

Pies and cakes are poisonous.

To healthy persons mineral waters are not wholesome. Light and sunshine are indispensable to health, and great curative agents in disease.

If you wish to live to eighty-five in the full enjoyment of your faculties, go to bed at 9 o'clock, and eat twice a day a moderate quantity of plain food.

The native American requires more sleep than the average European. Nine or ten hours' sleep in a single night is very beneficial. Thin Yankees should go to bed at nine and rise between five and six.

People who are fat can easily be reduced by reducing their food and giving them more exercise. Such persons must not sleep too much. Long sleep fattens. Thin people, on the contrary, [illegible]

— Weakness of the stomach is a protection against other maladies. So dyspepsia is the safety valve, and may be spoken of as one of the sources of longevity.

The word biliousness is a sort of respectful cover for piggishness. People are not bilious who eat what they should.

☞ M. CHERON, who has been experimenting in the use of electricity in chronic rheumatism, reports: 1. That the swellings of the joints caused by rheumatism may be considerably diminished by the constant current. 2. That the pain may be greatly abated by a few applications. 3. That stiffness of the joint can be prevented. 4. That sometimes a complete cure may be effected.

☞ Never speak under a hoarseness, especially if it requires an effort, or gives a hurting or a painful feeling, for it often results in permanent loss of voice, a life-long invalidism.

☞ For chapped lips and hands, use "camphor ice," or pure mutton tallow put on warm. Candles are unsafe for this purpose, as they are sometimes poisoned with arsenic.

WHAT A RECOLLECTION!

Mary Anna was a poor little orphan child about seven years old. Her mother had been dead nearly two years. Soon after her death Mary learned to pray, and often sought the blessing of the gentle Savior who loves the little ones so much.

One time as Miss L., a christian friend, was talking with her, she asked her if she could remember anything about her mother.

"Yes," said the little girl, "I remember she never told me about the Savior."

What a sad remembrance this for a child! Mother, if you should die to-day and leave your little ones, could they say this of you? If so, see to it that they could not say it to-morrow! In the morning sow thy seed, and trust the Lord to give the increase.

Oh, speak of Jesus to the young,
Declare this matchless story,
Let the sweet words from mother's tongue
Proclaim the Lord of glory.

KEEP DOWN THE WEEDS.

"You must keep down the weeds, darling," said grandpapa, as he raked in the garden, and give the flowers plenty of water. Did you never think, Lina dear, that your mind was a garden?" "My mind, grandpa?" And Lina set down her watering-pot, and looked up into the old man's face. "My mind a garden?" she repeated.

"Yes, dear. Your mind is that part of you in which you think and feel. Good thoughts and feelings are the flowers and fruit that grow in the gardens of our minds, and evil thoughts and feelings the weeds. Now, suppose I were to let the weeds grow just as they liked all over this garden, what do you think would happen?"

"Just what has happened to neighbor Orton's garden," replied Lina. "The weeds would grow faster than the good plants and flowers, and cover them over, or kill them out."

"And as it is with neighbor Orton's garden," said grandpa, "so it is with the minds of his children. In their gardens the weeds have grown faster than the flowers."

"They are bad boys, I know," answered Lina.

"Because their father neglected the gardens of their minds, and did not pull up or keep down the evil weeds."

"Oh, now I understand, grandpa. And do we all have weeds in the gardens of our minds?"

"All of us, darling—the weeds of selfish thoughts and feelings—and whenever we discover them we should pull them up by the roots. God will make the flowers of love and mercy, of kindness and good-will, of patience and self-denial, and all heaven-born graces, grow richly in our gardens if we but keep down the weeds."—Children's Hour.

ON THE TRACK.

The other day, I heard a mother ask her little son to do something. "In a minute," he said. She spoke again, but it was one, two, three, four, five minutes before he minded her. It makes me think of the switch-tender's boy. What if he had waited a minute before minding his father?

A switch-tender in Prussia was just going to move the rail, in order to put a coming train of cars on a side track, when he caught sight of his little son playing on the track. The engine was in sight and he had not a moment to spare. He might jump and save his child, but he could not do that and turn the switch in time; and if it were not done, the oncoming train would meet another train, and a terrible smash and crash would take place. The safety of hundreds of lives depended upon his fidelity. What could he do? What did he do? "Lie down! lie down!" he called, with a loud, quick voice, to the child; and seizing the switch, the train passed safely on its proper track.

Did the heavy train run over the little boy? —was he killed?—was he crushed to pieces? No; for he did just as his father told him, and did it instantly. He fell flat between the rails, and the cars went high over his head; and when the anxious father sprang to the spot, there he was alive and well; not a hair was touched. It was his quick obedience, you see, that saved his life. He did not stop a minute. Even a moment's hesitation would have been too late.—Ex.

DWELLERS IN TENTS.

A while on earth we roam,
In these frail houses which are not our home,
Journeying toward a refuge that is sure,—
A rest secure.

Only a little while
We dread the frown of life, and court its smile,
A dwelling then we have, not made with hands,
In other lands.

Therefore, we need not mourn
That sudden clouds across our skies are borne,
That winter chills us, and the storm makes rents
In our frail tents.

Therefore we need not fear,
Though moth and rust corrupt our treasure here;
Though midnight thieves creep in with silent stealth
To seize our wealth.

For, in our Father's house,
A mansion fair he has prepared for us;
And only till his voice shall call us hence,
We dwell in tents.

THE TWO RESURRECTIONS.

"Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."—Rev. 20: 6.

It is affirmed in this passage that there is a first resurrection, in contradistinction from a second; that this resurrection is confined to the blessed and the holy, who are to be made kings and priests unto God the Father and Christ the Son. These are the "royal priesthood" of God, that "peculiar people" to whom St. Peter wrote his first epistle, and the "chosen generation, elect and precious," throughout the intervening centuries of our gospel age, the full tale of whom shall be completed in these times of the end by the faithful witnesses for Jesus, resisting unto blood, striving against sin and the man of sin. It is affirmed of the blessed and holy confessors of Jesus, that they are to reign with Christ a thousand years on the earth. Not that this is to be the full period of their future being; nay, verily, their inheritance is eternal life, an incorruptible heritage, an undefiled, unmarred, undisputed, inalienable inheritance, a kingdom that cannot be moved, a home eternal in the heavens. These thousand years shall be the vestibule of their eternal house. They shall be but as one day with the Lord, contrasted with that far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

We say that the term "first" implies a second. Accordingly we read in the immediate context, and not in any isolated, disconnected portion of Scripture, the rest of the dead, the unholy, lived not again until the thousand years were finished. Then shall they rise from their graves, wherein they have been awaiting "the fearful looking for of judgment, the fiery indignation which shall devour the adversary." This is the second resurrection, and upon these that "shall awake to shame and everlasting contempt" the second death shall have full power.

Thus the subjects for our meditation are the two resurrections, and the millennium intervening between them.

To narrow as much as possible the bounds of thought, I shall assume that you are fully established in your belief that God will raise you up at the last day. Thousands have publicly affirmed Sabbath after Sabbath, yea, thrice have they repeated their witness-bearing, with the most solemn asseveration, "I believe in the resurrection of the dead, and the life of the world to come."

Let me then bring before you with the utmost prominence a distinction in the resurrection state; a resurrection of the blessed and holy and faithful; a resurrection of the just, and then after a lapse of a thousand years of mediatorial kingship, the rise of the wicked dead to shame and contempt, to judgment, to the second death.

We may be asked whether it is safe to take this passage of the Apocalypse as the key of interpretation to other passages. We say that it is perfectly legitimate so to do, if this passage be the genuine word of God. About this genuineness all scholars are agreed. Yea, this very roll of the Apocalypse, about which so many cavils have been raised, has been proved to be as genuine as any portion of the divine word. It is the express testimony of Jesus to his servant John, who most distinctly affirmed the truth of what he had seen and heard, and we see no reason why it should not be received as implicitly, as literally, as any other direct revelation from God to mankind. Here is not the slightest intimation of a symbol, as in several other parts of this revelation of Jesus Christ. We know that five of the wisest may be of four minds about it; but such diversity must arise from no uniform mode of receiving the testimony. Wherever a strictly literal interpretation is not incompatible with common sense, let literalness be the rule, then shall we have less divergency of opinion, far greater unity of belief. Nothing has been the cause of so much heresy, of so much controversy, as the allegorizing temper of Origen and his school of thought. We take it that in the clear revealings of a gospel there ought to be plain speaking, and we conceive that there is far less shadow than some would have us to believe. By pursuing a literal interpretation throughout the entire Scriptures, wherever a figure is not distinctly asserted, or manifestly implied by common sense, we receive a far more intelligent revelation than is afforded by the many-sided views of spiritualizing theologians. Let such a course be tried by yourselves in your reperusal of the Scriptures, they will then reveal to you less of allegory, and more of the truth as it is in Jesus. You will also have gained another view of the mysteries of redemption.

We find them in the very part of the Apocalypse which is the fountain of our revealed knowledge as to our momentous future, the distinct affirmation of two resurrections, and of an intervening millennium. But if this be true scriptural teaching, then the same will be taught directly or indirectly in other parts of Scripture.

We are kindly reminded by those of what has been called a more orthodox creed, that the Apocalypse was written before the Gospel according to St. John. If, then, the reader of St. John's Gospel had previously the revealings of the Apocalypse, he would most naturally interpret the sayings of our blessed Lord as recorded by St. John in the light of the earlier Revelation.

Let us, then, read the statement of our Lord, having on our minds the previously-taught truth, that the blessed and holy should have part in a first resurrection, and that the rest of the dead, the unsaved, should not live again until after the lapse of a thousand years. However the Jews might understand our Lord as he spake to them, the Christians who had read the Apocalypse must have understood his declaration as referring to two resurrections. "Marvel not at this," said he, "for the hour is coming [the season, the period is coming—not the twenty-fourth fraction of a day, but the season], in the which all that are in the graves shall hear the voice of the Son of man, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of judgment." Judgment rather than "damnation" is the rendering of the Greek word (krisis) crisis, which is repeated four several times in the same paragraph—John 5: 20–29. The Ephesian christians, and those of the other six churches of Asia Minor, must have interpreted the resurrection unto life as the first resurrection, wherein the second death hath no power, and the resurrection to judgment as the second resurrection, when the great white throne shall be set, and all mankind shall be judged according to the deeds done in the body. Accordingly in the very next chapter of the Gospel, our Savior reiterates as the most distinguishing privilege of his believing people, "I will raise him up at the last day." Now there can be no force in these words, and no emphasis in this promised privilege, if all indiscriminately, the evil as well as the good, are to be raised in one hour; but if it be borne in mind that there is to be a first resurrection of the royal priesthood, in which the holy are to be taken and the unholy left, then there is sweetest assurance in this promise, "I will raise him up at the last day."

St. Paul evidently understood "the gospel which he had received" as revealing a former and a latter resurrection, for he wrote to the Philippians (3: 11), "If by any means I might attain to the resurrection of the dead." How could he have been apprehensive lest he should not attain unto a resurrection in which the just and unjust should be raised simultaneously, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump? He could not have thus solemnly left on record his fear that he should be left in the grave, when all mankind shall be alike raised, irrespectively. But bear in mind the revelation of a first resurrection of the just alone unto life, and you at once realize the fear of the apostle lest he should not attain unto the resurrection of the holy, lest he should become a castaway. Hence he writes to the church at Rome of a "resurrection from among the dead" (8: 11), as though not a few were to be left in their graves for a future resurrection. He describes this rising from among the dead as the peculiar and inestimable privilege of such only as are quickened by the Holy Spirit of God. Of these our Lord had spoken as "accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead." Luke 20: 35. Thus it follows that many shall not be accounted worthy of this pre-eminent blessing, this earlier resurrection unto life and blessedness. These are they whom God hath made "heirs of the world," yea, "joint heirs with Christ."

Accordingly we find Rabbinical writers thus commenting on the passage in Daniel (12: 3), which bears upon this point. And many of them which sleep in their graves shall awake; these to everlasting life; those to shame and everlasting contempt. Not all shall arise at first; but these at once, after the trouble such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time; those (left behind for a time in the dust of the earth) shall awake at a later period to shame and contempt.

Now let us review in this light the saying of our Lord above referred to,—"Verily, verily, I say unto you, the hour is coming and now is"—hence this word "hour," or season, or dispensation, or era, denotes an undefined space of time; it has already embraced nearly nineteen centuries—the period is coming, and now is commenced, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live. Marvel not at this, for the hour, the season is coming—(and if this period has already embraced eighteen hundred years, may it not embrace a whole millennium longer?)—the period is coming in which all that are in the graves shall come forth; some, they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life, the first resurrection; and they that have done evil, at the close of the period to the resurrection crisis; a crisis in very deed, mourning, lamentation, woe.

These, then, are the two distinct resurrections of the Apocalypse. The one is a resurrection unto life, wherein none shall be hurt of the second death; the other is the resurrection unto the second death.

At the appearing of the Son of man, at the sounding of the last of the trumpets, the dead in Christ shall rise from the dust of the earth, the royal priesthood of the new kingdom shall awake from the dust of the grave, shall be clothed with their beautiful garments, shall receive their coronals of glory, and shall enter into their Master's joy. The living saints, the martyrs of that great tribulation, resisting unto death, are changed in that moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at that last trump; these are caught up to meet their Lord in the air. The rest of the dead live not again until the thousand years are finished, until after this millennial reign.

This first resurrection, then, is that of the just, made righteous in Christ, redeemed for ever. It is the unspeakable privilege of those holy ones alone who shall be counted worthy to obtain that world. Let us fear lest we shall not attain unto this resurrection, lest a promise having been left us of entering into rest, any of us should seem to come short of it.

O, glorious sight! the earth shall shake, reel to and fro, heave as in the throes of travail, yield forth her dead, and no more cover her slain; the sea shall yield up her many buried ones who have sunk into her boiling waters, uncoffined, unknelled, but in sure and certain hope of a first resurrection. All these shall rise incorruptible, spiritual, glorious. Death is swallowed up in victory.

Simultaneously the inhabitants of earth shall be stricken with panic-terrors, and whilst they are calling to the mountains to fall upon them and hide them from the glorious appearing, the terrible majesty, the wrath of the Lamb, amid the terror of the impenitent, the confusion of the unbelieving, the empty blasphemies of the rebellious, shall be the first resurrection; and these sinners shall be driven away in their wickedness, like chaff from the summer floor, like the scattering of the fierce whilwind. Their destruction, too, is swallowed up of victory; and thus in a twofold sense is brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed in victory.

In the sublime ode whence this saying is taken, the princely bard is describing the glory of Jesus and his royal priesthood, and in this sense, and not in any accommodated language, is the inspired apostle describing the captivity of the monster death for a period, even until the thousand years shall be finished. The same apostle assures us that death is the last enemy that is to be destroyed. The final and utter extinction of this last foe is not to be effected until every other enemy shall have been subdued, until the King shall have reigned before his ancients gloriously, putting down all rule, and all authority, and power; yea, until he shall have put all his enemies under his feet; till Satan shall have been loosed out of his prison for that terrible season of post-millennial woe, till death and hades shall be cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death.

But it may be asked, Do not several of the parables of our Lord teach the severance of the risen righteous from the risen wicked, as though they were to arise simultaneously? The reply is at hand. We say that the transfiguration and snatching away of those who shall be alive at the glorious appearing of our Lord will prove an actual, a terrible, a terribly real severance from the ungodly inhabitants of the world. It will be the severance of the sheep from the goats. It will be the sifting of the wheat from the chaff, or its separation from the tares. It must be borne in mind that one who heard these parables, wrote, when he had been more fully instructed in the deep things of God—"A thousand years is with the Lord as one day." St. Peter thus writes, too, of this very period of final severance, the day of the Lord; and as though refuting some objection that had become rife, he intimates that the "day of the Lord" is to be a thousand years. At its rising shall be the resurrection of the holy; at its setting shall be the blackness of darkness; the night of the overthrow of the wicked.

Not a single parable of our blessed Lord even implies, much less does it expressly declare, that there is to be no interval between the rise of the righteous and the final doom of the unholy. And no parable must be so interpreted as to contradict any distinct statement of Holy Writ; it would be inconsistent, indeed, for those who object to literal interpretations of Revelation, to take as literal what is expressly said to be a parable. The phrase "first resurrection" is express and unequivocal. It cannot be resolved into a metaphor, because the phrase is expressly introduced as explanatory, and it would be absurd in the highest degree to say that a metaphor, or symbol, is used to explain something else that is symbolical. Such explanations are worthy of Delphi, or of Mecca, or of the Vatican, with their disguises of truth, but are totally repugnant to the genius of Christianity, and its prophesyings, "whereunto ye do well to take heed, as unto a light shining in a dark place."

A first resurrection assuredly must imply a second, after a longer or a shorter interval. Even so, when we read, "the rest of the dead lived not again" until after a certain period, we must infer that others were to rise before that period.

There are some who would escape from the revelation of two resurrections, by resolving our phrase "first resurrection" into a spiritual resurrection, a quickening, a death unto sin, a new life unto righteousness. Then to be consistent, these allegorists must also spiritualize the words of the immediate context, The rest of the dead in trespasses and sins are to be raised, quickened from their death of sin unto a life of righteousness, and that too after a thousand years. Which of these two interpretations is the more consistent with truth and soberness? Can we believe in this future universal restoration after the roll of a millennium? Then, again, if a spiritual resurrection be thought to be revealed here, it would have passed already. Let such remember Hymenæus and Philetus, of whom St. Paul wrote in his very last epistle (2 Tim. 2: 18), "These concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is passed already, and they overthrow the faith of some; their words will eat as doth a canker; avoid, then, profane babblings, and vain words, for they will increase unto more ungodliness."

In contrast to such as these, the apostle urges Timothy, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman rightly dividing the word of truth, needing not to be ashamed." Which of the two interpretations is the more accurately divided, the more in harmony with Scripture, we can safely leave to the judgment of every unbiassed thinker, who is not pledged to the support of some tradition of the elders, or some dogma of modern schools.

St. Paul writes to the Corinthians (1 Cor. 15: 23), "Every man [shall be made alive] in his own order: Christ the first fruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming." Now, after the fashion of modern interpreters of the parables of our Lord on this point, the harvest ought speedily to follow the first fruits, whereas the period denoted by the word afterwards is still running on; it has already embraced eighteen hundred years, and may possibly be even two millenniums between the rise of Christ the first fruits and of them that are Christ's at his coming. It is another form of the same adverb (epita, ita), which commences the next clause. Then, or rather afterwards, cometh the end. And as eighteen hundred years have been embraced under the one adverb, why may not a thousand years be comprehended under the second. It is worthy of note that the second adverb (ita) is not so intensive as the first (epita), as though the apostle would intimate a shorter duration of time in the second interval, even one millennium. "Then cometh the end, when he [Christ] shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power," even the last enemy that shall be destroyed; then shall the millennial reign be at an end, and then shall the Son also himself be subject unto God that put all things under his feet; and God shall be all in all. The mediatorial reign will be at an end, the mediatorial scheme will have been accomplished; the foes of Jehovah Jesus will have been made his footstool, and throughout the whole eternity of bliss, which he hath given to his forever redeemed, the Son of man shall be adored as the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, God all in all; and unto him shall be glory and honor for ever and ever. Amen.—Rainbow.

THE POPULAR SUPERSTITION:—GHOSTS.

BY ELDER O. R. FASSETT.

(Concluded.)

6. Eliphaz' vision.

"In thoughts from the visions of the night, when deep sleep falleth on men, fear came upon me, and trembling, which made all my bones to shake. Then a spirit passed before my face; the hair of my flesh stood up: it stood still, but I could not discern the form thereof; an image was before mine eyes, there was silence, and I heard a voice saying": etc.—Job 4: 13–19.

This ghost seen by Eliphaz happens to be in his dreams and visions by night! The spirit communication given cannot be divine revelation; for the Lord declares the language and communications Job's comforters had made, "folly." Job 42: 8. Yet how often is Eliphaz' spirit revelation quoted to prove that men's bodies are "houses of clay" (v. 19.), which "the immortal soul" tenants till death, when it goes into another provided for it in the heavens. 2 Cor. 5: 1. And the attempt is made to make Paul teach the same absurdity.

The patriarch Job had no such view or hope concerning the future of men: "Man lieth down and riseth not: till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake nor be raised out of their sleep." 14: 12. All that constitutes "man" is asleep during the night of death, and not awake roaming abroad, as credited in his day by the heathen; which superstition his friends advocated and declared to be popular: "With us are both the grey-headed and very aged men." 15: 1–10. Instead of human spirits having a conscious existence and knowledge of the world's affairs in the state of death, and roaming here and there in the universe, Job asserts they are "at rest," "asleep," (ch. 3: 12–19); and that even parents in all their solicitude for their surviving offspring have no knowledge of the condition of their sons after they themselves die. 14: 20, 21. And he prays himself: "Oh! that thou wouldst hide me in the grave (sheol;) that thou wouldst keep me secret," etc. ch. 14: 13. The grave (sheol) he declares to be his "house" during the night of death, and that his "bed" in that "house" is "in the darkness;" and furthermore, "in the dust" amidst corruption and "the worm." 17: 13–16. And so dark and dismal is sheol, and "the gates of death," as he approaches them, in his conception, that he says: "I go whence I shall not return, even to the land of darkness and the shadow of death; a land of darkness, as darkness itself, and of the shadow of death, without any order, and where the light is as darkness." 10: 21, 22. Job's description of "sheol" his "house" in death, is not one very inviting or attractive. The blinds are so closed as not to allow a single ray of "light" to dispel the darkness; and such is the confusion that there is not the least "order" conceivable; and as to inmates, it is divided between himself and "corruption and worms." The Pharisaic "Bosom of Abraham," according to Job, has not many attractions.

Out of this "house" Job did not expect to "return" or have the power to do so by virtue of a "vital spirit entity which survived in death;" but he did by the power of him who is "a quickening spirit." 1 Cor. 15: 45. Hence to those inquiring concerning his hope and the reasons of it, he replies: "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold and not another, though my reins be consumed within me." 19: 25–27. Eliphaz and those entertaining the immaterialistic doctrine may declare this "vain knowledge—unprofitable talk—speeches wherewith he can do no good" (15: 2, 3) and adhere to their visions of ghosts and an illusive ghost-state, scouting "materialism." Yet we prefer to side with the patriarch, as the "root of the matter is found in him," and his is the Biblical hope.

Dr. Good says, and the reader will readily excuse so lengthy a quotation in this place from him, for it is just to the point:

"If we turn from Persia, Egypt and Hindostan to Arabia, to the fragrant groves and learned shades of Dedan and Teman, from which it is certain that Persia, and highly probable that Hindostan derived its first polite literature, we shall find the entire subject of the immortality of the soul in as blank and barren a silence as the deserts by which they are surrounded; or if touched upon to betray doubt, and sometimes disbelief. The tradition, indeed, of a future state of retributive justice, seems to have reached the schools of this part of the world, and seem to have been generally, though not universally accredited; but the future existence it alludes to is that of a resurrection of the body, and not of a survival of the soul, after the body's dissolution.

"The oldest book that has descended to us from this quarter (and there is little doubt that it is the oldest, or one of the oldest works in existence,) is that astonishing and transcendent composition, the book of Job; a work that aught assuredly to raise the genius of Idumea above that of Greece, and that of itself is demonstrative of the indefatigable spirit with which the deepest as well as the most polished sciences were pursued in this region, during what may be called comparatively the youth and day-spring of the world. Yet in this sublime and magnificent poem, replete with all the wisdom and learning of the age, the doctrine upon the subject before us is merely as I have just stated it, a patriarchal or traditionary belief of a future state of retributive justice, not by the natural immortality of the soul, but by a resurrection of the body. The Hindoo philosophers totally and universally denied a resurrection of the body, and supported the doctrine alone upon the natural immortality of the soul; but the Arabian philosophers passed over the immortality of the soul, and rested the doctrine of a future life solely upon the resurrection of the body.

"The schools of Greece, derived their earliest metaphysics from the Gymnosophists of India, and hence, like the latter, they contended for the immortality of the soul, and overlooked and reprobated the doctrine of the resurrection of the body."

We will refer in the next place to a few passages in the New Testament upon which ghost-theorists base their faith that the ghost-state is taught in the Scriptures, not alluded to in other articles by the writer in a previous number of the Quarterly, and already explained in this.

"And when the disciples saw him [Jesus] walking on the sea, they were troubled, saying, It is a spirit: and they cried out for fear. But straightway Jesus spoke to them, saying, Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid." Matt. 14: 26, 27.

This is simply the record of the fact that they were affrighted with the prevailing superstition. The doctrine of ghosts or spirit-apparitions is not taught in the least. It seems that "Jesus constrained his disciples" to take ship to the opposite side of the sea, while he "went into a mountain to pray," they expecting him to follow them afterward by another vessel. But in the night "a contrary wind arose on the sea, and they were tempest-tossed in their ship. To their astonishment Jesus came in a most unexpected manner, and by a miracle they had never before seen him perform. He came walking on the sea!" The first thought was, the popular superstition—"it is his ghost!" But he soon dispelled their fears. It was himself.

Let us look at the history of the times, and the doctrine inculcated in their day which they had been taught from their youth up. Enfield says:

"The seeds of the Cabalistic doctrine were first sown under the Ptolemies, when the Jews began to learn the Egyptian and Oriental theology, and to incorporate these foreign dogmas with the ancient creed. . . . The Pharisees arose soon after the return from the Babylonian captivity in consequence of the introduction of traditionary institutions, and allegorical interpretations. They maintained the soul of man is spiritual and immortal. In the invisible world beneath the earth, rewards and punishments will be dispensed to the virtuous. The resurrection of the body is to be expected. They held also to the transmigration of souls."

Dr. Campbell remarks, in his sixth Dissertation:

"On the subject of a future state, we find a considerable difference in the popular opinion of the Jews in our Savior's time, from that which prevailed in the days of the ancient prophets. As both Greeks and Romans had adopted the notion, that the ghosts of the deceased were susceptible of both enjoyment and suffering, they were led to suppose a sort of retribution in that state for their merit or demerit in the present. The Jews did not indeed adopt the Pagan follies on the subject, nor did they express themselves entirely in the same manner; but the general train of thinking in both came pretty much to coincide. The Greek hades they found well adapted to express the Hebrew sheol. This they came to conceive as including different characters."

The traditionary idea of ghosts prevailed among the Pharisees, as is seen from their language in the Acts, as well as the notion of spirit communications from the departed dead: "If a spirit or an angel hath spoken to him." Acts 23: 9. Luke 24: 36–39 is explained as above, by the prevailing tradition. Their understanding and knowledge of the Scriptures and of the future state were so perverted by tradition that Jesus rebuked his disciples most severely: "O foolish, and slow of heart to believe." 25–27, 44–46.

Peter's appearance at the gate when liberated by the angel of God is quoted to prove the existence of ghosts: "Then said they [the disciples], It is his angel." Acts 12: 15. But this is merely the superstition of the disciples who had not even yet got rid of the prevailing prejudices. They did not know but that Peter had been killed as had been James, and that it was his ghost knocking at the gate; but that did not make it so. It was Peter in reality, the man himself, as has been the case with most ghosts ever seen.

Acts 23: 9, to which we have already alluded, reveals to us the belief of the Pharisees concerning the intermediate state; by which doctrine and "tradition" they "made void the word of God," and the "hope of the resurrection." To a clergyman who had quoted this in support of the Platonic doctrine of the immortality of the soul, and claimed that Paul was a Pharisee in this respect, I sent the inquiry for him to answer to his congregation the next time he appeared before them—"Did Paul believe in spirit communications from the dead; and do you?" The reply has not yet been given. Nor will it be until he fully embraces spiritism.

And we would seriously inquire if ghosts of the dead do thus appear on earth and to the living, how is it? Do they have a furlough from heaven and hell to give their communications, or are they still in "the mundane sphere?" The fact relative to Paul was, that he was not a Sadducee in any sense of the word; for they believed in no future life whatever. "The Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit." Acts 23: 8. Enfield says: "They believed there will be no resurrection of the dead, nor any rewards and punishments after this life. . . . They denied the resurrection of the dead; yea, all future existence."

Neither was Paul a Pharisee, only so far as "the resurrection of the dead" was concerned. And it is to this faith, only, he commits himself on the occasion alluded to: "Men and brethren, I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee; of the hope and resurrection of the dead, I am called in question." Acts 23: 6. He makes no confession that he believed with the popular sect in their tradition of the immortality of the soul and a conscious intermediate state, and spirit-communication by the "shades" of the dead, and was thus a "Hellenistic Pharisee;" he was of the "Aramaic school;" "a Pharisee of the Pharisees," who rejected Hellenism and adhered solely to the Scriptural hope concerning a future state.

"There was no lack of Hellenistic synagogues at Jerusalem, which at the seasons of the festivals would be crowded with foreign pilgrims and become the scene of animated discussions. 'Hebrew of the Hebrews.' Hebrew is used for an Aramaic Jew as opposed to a Grecian or Hellenist." "The pious Hebrew was always in the attitude of expecting the Coming One." "It may be considered certain that the family of St. Paul, though Hellenistic in speech (Paul could speak Greek,) were no Hellenizers in theology. The manner in which St. Paul speaks implies the most uncontaminated hereditary Judaism. 'Are they Hebrews? So am I.'"*

The appearance of Moses and Elias on the Mount of Transfiguration (Matt. 16: 28; 17: 1–9), Christ himself declares to be merely a "vision" of the coming kingdom. A "vision" is not a reality. See 2 Pet. 1: 16–21.

Christ appeared as if immortalized and glorified in the vision: yet he was not. And what incongruity, that both Christ and Elijah who had neither seen or experienced death should be there in person, and Moses who was "dead" and "buried," also there an actual spirit, or ghost, as large as life! If he was there in actuality, he was raised from the dead. But we regard it, as Christ affirms it to be, a "vision."

We have but one remaining passage to explain:

"I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book: worship God."—Rev. 22: 9.

If this personage was one of the prophets, as is maintained, he must be one of two, either Enoch or Elijah, who were "translated that they should not see death." But by a reference to Rev. 1: 1, we learn that he is Christ's special messenger: "He sent and signified it [the revelation] by his angel unto his servant John." It is for those maintaining him to be a glorified human being to prove this; much more that he is a ghost of a dead prophet. The whole language and circumstances of the book of Revelation show that this holy messenger was one of that higher order of intelligences in the universe, an angel proper. "Bless the Lord, all ye his angels, that excel in strength; that do his commandments, hearkening unto the voice of his word. Bless ye the Lord, all ye his hosts; ye ministers of his that do his pleasure." Ps. 103: 20, 21. Paul speaks of these as ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation," (Heb. 1. 14); not that they are heirs of salvation. Christ when he comes to judgment will be accompanied with "all the holy angels," whom he shall "send with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect." Matt. 24: 30, 31.

The spirits of the deceased are not angels, nor do they become angels, as is conceived by many. The language of the above text simply implies this: that this "angel" is a "fellow servant" with the apostle of the Lord, Christ; and a fellow servant of the prophets of the same Lord, though in a higher sphere; and a creature and not the Creator, or Lord, as John thought he, a glorified being, might be. His command is to "worship God!" And this was said just as John "fell down to worship before the feet of the angel."

I would remark in conclusion, that no spirits or ghosts of the departed dead have ever, or can ever appear to the living; for the plain reason that there are none such anywhere in God's universe in conscious existence to appear.

It is supposed that ghosts haunt houses; but it is usually where there are corridors, dark recesses, deep closets, or in cellars that they are said to appear. But why don't we all see ghosts? And why not see as many ghosts now as were seen in former years? In my childhood I dared not go into a dark room, and especially near a graveyard, for fear of seeing ghosts. But I have long since got rid of this superstition. I can go from my cellar to my chamber, in every room of my dwelling in the darkest night, and never expect to see either the ghosts of my deceased parents, brothers and sisters, of whom I have several in their graves,—or of my children, one of whom has been borne away to the grave from my present home! The Scriptures inform me where they are, and afford me consolation in the hope of their resurrection. Thanks be to God for the light of divine revelation in my dwelling, and in my hands, and which I have hid in my heart. I prize the word of God, and the gospel above all price: and the love of God in the gift of his Son to grant me, a sinner, pardon and the hope of everlasting life through him my Redeemer, has won my heart; and to him I consecrate my life and my being evermore.

GHOST STORIES.

There are amusing instances of the superstitious believers in ghosts having been frightened nearly out of their wits. In such a frame of mind, and with such a belief as that the dead are alive and capable of communicating with the living, or are conscious of the world's affairs, the imagination in the darkness of night may create ghosts, or fancy that a white horse, cow or other animal is the spirit of a departed fellow mortal! I was pointed to a vacant house not long since which was supposed to be haunted, and every night for a succession of evenings it was visited by a multitude of people to hear the spirit rappings upon the floor of the house. The ghost, however, finally turned out to be a roaming dog which made his kennel underneath the dwelling, crawling through a hole in the wall! And when persons would speak, or invoke the spirit of the dead, to make demonstration of its existence, by the wag of his tail against the floor, their superstitious curiosity was gratified! It is not many months since that the Winslow House in St. Anthony, Minn., was disturbed by the ghost of a departed physician seeking communication with his surviving widow, to inform her of an impending danger, it was claimed. His ghost was seen on several occasions by a girl and certain others, it was reported. Both the cities of St. Anthony and Minneapolis were disturbed by the presence of this deceased doctor. Hundreds of people flocked to the house to get, if possible, a glimpse of the spirit in its hidings in cellars, dark recesses, and garret. The public prints at Minneapolis and St. Paul had daily reports of the spirit's wondrous doings. But finally a gun loaded with a heavy charge to shoot the apparition if it appeared, expelled the ghost from the premises, so that he has not been seen or heard from to this day! But I suppose multitudes in these cities are still believers in human spirit existence after the death of the body, and ready to be duped again when Spiritist necromancers are ready to practice deception upon them.

The following Scriptures, with others, should be consulted, where God in the most positive and fearful manner denounces, under penalty of the eternal loss of existence, those who have any thing to do with supposed human spirits, spirit communications and consultations, and "the doctrines of devils" taught by "the devil and his angels." Lev. 19: 31; 20: 6, 27; Deut. 18: 19–12; Isa. 8: 19–20; 50: 10, 11; 2 Thess. 2: 8–12; 1 Tim. 4: 1–3; 2 Tim. 3: 6–9; Rev. 16: 13–15.

The doctrine of the Bible and of the gospel concerning the mortality of our race, and the necessity of seeking for immortality (Rom. 2: 7), through repentance, faith, and obedience to God's commands, is essential to keep us in these "last days" of "peril" from the illusive "fables" and "strong delusions" of the "doctrines of devils."

May the Lord incline our hearts to credit the record that God gave of his Son. "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." 1 John 5: 10–12.

"Lay aside every Weight."—As applied to christians, it means that they should remove all which would obstruct progress in the christian course. It is not the same thing in all persons. In one it may be pride; in another vanity; in another worldliness; in another a violent and ungovernable temper; in another a heavy, laden, insensible heart; in another some improper and unholy attachment. Some persons would make much more progress if they would disencumber themselves of the heavy weight of gold which they are endeavoring to carry with them. Even a feather or a ring may become such a weight, that they never will make much progress towards the prize.—Barnes.

The World's Crisis
AND
SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Oct. 14, 1870.

Please Remember!

☞ All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

LIBERAL OFFERS.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

We are anxious to have our paper reach several thousand new readers the coming year, and become a blessing to them. It is the best means we have of sowing the seed of the gospel of the kingdom in some hearts, and we should all awake, and do whatever we can to have its warnings of the coming judgment reach as many new readers as possible.

Some of our preachers have done nobly, and others would gladly help on the good cause, if they could receive aid for their families while they spend their time for the paper. For the benefit of such, the A. C. P. Society, at a recent meeting, by vote authorized the Agent to pay ten per cent to preachers on all collections for the Crisis and Young Pilgrim; and it is hoped they will take hold of the work in earnest, and have great success. Those who understand the expense of publishing a paper, know that it would cost no more to set up the type for twelve or fifteen thousand copies, than it does for a less number; hence, after our regular issue of about nine thousand copies is run off, we could print several thousand more at the cost only of press work and paper. It has, therefore, been concluded by the Editorial Committee and Business Agent, to whom the Society referred this subject, to make the following liberal offers to new subscribers, to induce them to form clubs, and thus make success easy to all who put forth efforts to obtain new subscribers.

TRIAL OFFER.

We will send the World's Crisis three months on trial, to new subscribers, for fifty cents. We ask our friends to obtain yearly subscriptions, if possible; but where subscribers can be obtained for only three months, please visit them again, and, if possible, get them to renew before their paper is stopped at the end of three months.

To aid in obtaining new subscribers for 1871, we make the following offer of nearly

Three Months Free.

We will send the Crisis—for the balance of this year, from the time the name is received—free to all new subscribers for 1871, sent in before Jan. 1st.—Rate $2.50.

Now is the time to subscribe, and put forth energetic efforts to obtain new subscribers.

CLUBBING WITH OTHER PAPERS.

As many persons take several papers, and could be induced to take the Crisis, if they could get two papers at club rates, we have accepted offers to club other papers with the Crisis, which will enable our friends to obtain subscribers where it would otherwise be impossible to introduce our paper.

If any of our regular subscribers wish any of the papers on the list at club rates, they can get new subscribers for the Crisis, as it is not necessary that both papers should be sent to the same address.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS THREE R SIX MONTHS FREE.

We will send the World's Crisis six months, and the Phrenological Journal and Packard's Monthly (price $3.00) one year for $3.00; or the World's Crisis three months, with the Rural New Yorker (price $3.00) one year for $3.00; or, three months with the New York Weekly Tribune (price $2.00) one year for $2.00; or three months with the Bee-Keeper's Journal and National Agriculturist (price $1.00) one year for $1.00.

SAUL AND SAMUEL.

Some think the case of Saul and Samuel affords evidence in favor of man's consciousness in death. We turn to 1 Sam. and read: "Now Samuel was dead, and all Israel had lamented him, and buried him in Ramah, even in his own city." 1 Sam. 28: 3. This is a plain, simple statement of a fact—"Samuel was dead . . . and buried." Was he alive at the same time? Then he was not dead. If he was not dead, the record is untrue. The one who died, and was buried, was Samuel. Observe, there is not a word about his soul or spirit.

At this time Saul had become wicked, and the Lord would not commune with him, "neither by dreams, nor Urim, nor by prophets." Then Saul sought a woman that had "a familiar spirit," that he might make some inquiries. His servants directed him to one at Endor. Saul went in disguise, in company with two other men, and "came to the woman by night." After a proper introduction, and Saul had made known the object of his visit, the woman said: "Whom shall I bring up unto thee? And he said, Bring me up Samuel." In those days it was believed by those who had confidence in the works of familiar spirits, that when men died, their conscious part went down into the earth to dwell in happiness or misery. As this is not now believed among civilized nations, the demons, or familiar spirits, do not propose to bring our friends up from the infernal regions, or elysian fields, in the bowels of the earth, but down from the spheres or spirit-land. The spirits have changed their locality to suit the change in theology.

Why did Saul go to a woman that had "a familiar spirit"? How could the familiar spirit help him? Had he power over Samuel to raise him from the dead? or could he and the woman together raise him from his grave in Ramah, which was about sixty miles from Endor, where Saul found the woman? If they could raise one of the Lord's prophets, and from him get the desired information, why could they not raise them all, and thus supersede the need of a Savior to raise the dead? Is it true that a woman, with a familiar spirit, can raise the dead prophets at pleasure? Nay, verily.

But what was the work of the familiar spirit? He must have some part in the scene, or else it would be useless to consult a woman who was associated with such a spirit. It is a well-known fact that the spirits claim that they operate just like a mesmerizer. On this point we believe all Spiritualists are agreed. Says Mr. A. E. Newton, a noted Spiritualist, formerly editor of the Spiritual Age, published in Boston:—

"When two persons are closely in sympathetic or magnetic rapport with each other, the images that are in one mind may be perceived as objective realities by the other. This seems to be the case with the magnetizer and his subject, in the once common phenomenon of Mesmerism. The operator forms an image, as of a person, a serpent, a fire, or any other object, in his own mind; when the subject, if well under control, instantly sees the same thing as an objective reality. So, positive minds in a circle, or positive spirits who are around, may present the image of any person with whom they are familiar, and it may appear as a reality to the impressible medium."

This puts the case in its true light. In Mesmerism, the one under mesmeric control does not see the real object, but only a mental picture, formed in the mind of the operator. In the same manner the familiar spirit, who appeared to the woman at Endor, formed a mental picture of Samuel, just as he looked before he died, dressed in his mantle; and then the woman, his medium, being "well under control, instantly sees the same thing as an objective reality."

"It is known that a wise and strong-minded person in the spirit-world has the power to make visible to the eyes of mortals the exact appearance or semblance of the body it wore before death. This representation is elaborated sometimes to the minutest particulars, even to the reproduction of the appearance of the habiliments, etc., by which the person was characterized and identified while a resident of the earth."—Herald of Progress, Oct. 27th, 1860.

Again he says: "All intelligent spirits are great artists. They can psychologize a medium to see them, and to describe them in the style which would produce the deepest impression on the receiver. . . . They can easily represent themselves as being old or young, as in worldly dress or flowing robes, as is deemed best suited to accomplish the ends of the visitation."—Herald of Progress, Feb. 1st, 1862.

This is all just like the work of a mesmerizer, with this difference: mesmerism is conducted by men, and Spiritualism by demons, or the angels that sinned; who claim to be the spirits of our friends, for the purpose of confirming the great lie of their leader, the Devil, when he said, "Ye shall not surely die." The record of Saul's interview with the woman who had the familiar spirit, is a record of a spiritual manifestation just like those which are so common at the present day. "When the woman saw Samuel," as presented by the familiar spirit, or demon, "she cried with a loud voice." This awakened great interest in the mind of Saul, who said, "What sawest thou?" "And the woman said unto Saul, I saw gods ascending out of the earth. And he said unto her, What form is he of? And she said, An old man cometh up; and he is covered with a mantle." After the familiar spirit had presented Samuel to the mind of the woman, he proceeds to talk through her, representing himself to be Samuel. This is just like the work of spirits at the present day. Saul did not see Samuel, nor hear him, only through the mediumship of the woman, who was the mouth-piece for the demon, who wished to converse with Saul. She saw Samuel "covered with a mantle."

When Samuel died, was there a spirit that left him, and wore off his mantle, and then came back with it "up" out of the earth, at the call of this familiar spirit of the woman? We think his old mantle might have been found at this time hanging up in some closet, or other place. If Saul had asked the woman just where she saw Samuel standing in the room, and had gone to the very spot, and passed his hand about, he would have found nothing there; neither Samuel, nor mantle; yet, to her it appeared as a reality. She saw the mental picture presented to her by the demon, and it looked like a real object.

Her familiar spirit first showed her "gods ascending out of the earth." We do not believe any gods live in the earth. But the demon, like a mesmerizer, could cause her to see any objects he chose; and while under his control, to her they were realities.

It may be said that Samuel prophesied. Yes, but it did not come to pass. Samuel was a holy man, and Saul and his sons had become notoriously wicked. The prophecy reads: "To-morrow shalt thou and thy sons be with me." Were these wicked men to become companions of the holy prophet the next day? Such a conclusion is not very reasonable. When we follow out the history of Saul, we find he did not die till three days after his supposed interview with Samuel. Thus the whole affair is an account of a spiritual manifestation, and affords not a shadow of proof in favor of life in death.

1. Samuel was dead, and buried in Ramah.
2. If he appeared at Endor, he must have been raised at Ramah, and hastened to that place to meet Saul; but when he got there, no one could see him but the woman, by the aid of her familiar spirit.
3. Her declaration that she "saw gods ascending out of the earth," could not have been a reality; but her sight of Samuel, with his mantle, was produced by the same agency; and is therefore no more reliable.
4. The prophecy, purporting to come from Samuel, was a failure, and therefore must have come from some one else.
5. The whole account is in harmony with the position that Saul consulted the medium of a familiar spirit, who deceived him by professing to be Samuel. In 1 Chron. 10: 13, we read: "So Saul died for his transgression which he committed against the Lord, even against the word of the Lord, which he kept not, and also for asking counsel of one that had a familiar spirit, to inquire of it."
6. We think this account of Saul and Samuel affords no proof of consciousness between death and the resurrection.

THE EUROPEAN WAR.

During the last week, the French have made some earnest efforts to get out of Paris, and have been somewhat successful. The war is assuming a new aspect. The Prussians have retaken Orleans, and the French have gained some advantage in other places. A few weeks more may bring the war to a close, or else give it enlarged proportions.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

The Eastern question is still far from being settled. It looks more warlike than it did two weeks since. Lord Granville has sent word to Prince Gortschakoff that the original note addressed to the British government must be withdrawn, or the British minister will be removed from the Russian court. It is not very probable that Prussia will submit to any such dictation.

"GUIDE TO HOLINESS."—We take great pleasure in recommending the "Guide to Holiness" to our readers. It is edited by Dr. and Mrs. Palmer, New York. PERSONAL.—Bro. J. W. Britton was in our office with his wife, on his way to Virginia, on account of his health. Will give his P. O. address when he gets located. Several have written him to visit them, and this may explain the reason why he does not come. Pray for him. A. P. M.

THE LAWS OF LIFE, published at Dansville, N. Y., is thus noticed by the Advertiser of the same place:

The enterprising publishers of the Laws of Life have recently had engraved by the best engravers in New York an elegant title page from a beautiful original design. We wish our readers every one could see this title page and read the December number of this Laws of Life, that they might know how beautiful and how indispensable a family journal this Laws of Life has become.

We can fully endorse the above, and since the publishers, Austin, Jackson & Co., offer to send specimen copies free to whoever asks for them, we advise our readers to send for this December number. The subscription price is $1.00 per year.

NAPOLEON'S APPEARANCE.

One who has had a recent interview with Napoleon, at Wilhelmshohe, thus writes:—

"All that you have already heard and read about Napoleon's failing health, pallid complexion, sunken eyes and decrepit condition in general, I found to be the veriest idle "bosh." The Emperor is a stout, portly gentleman, setting forth all the indications of the enjoyment of robust health in his person. His hair shows a very slight tinge of gray. He wears a fine mustache and goatee. His eyes, though small, appear to be smiling with good humor and benevolence. He has liveliness and grace in every motion. Indeed, I may say that he presents an exceedingly handsome, pleasant exterior, which indicates an age rather of forty-two than sixty-two years. This is perfectly true of his appearance as it impressed me during the interview. I saw such a discrepancy between the picture of the Emperor, as I had previously imagined from spurious reports what it might be, that it could have almost caused me to doubt whether this was really Napoleon the Third who was sitting opposite and within a few yards' distance of me, had I not been reassured by the surrounding objects near the writing desks, such as a miniature portrait of the Empress in a gold frame, painted and engraved and set in diamonds, the monogram 'L. N.' on the boxes, and the seals and rings which were either lying about or worn by his Majesty."

"HEALTH BY GOOD LIVING."

This is the title of a new work by Dr. Hall, of Hall's "Journal of Health," which I have read with eagerness, and am very free to say it is by far the best work on the subject I have ever read. It is as full of good common sense "as an egg is full of meat." The great majority of people get sick and die, because they do not know how to live. This book clearly points out the way, and if people will only read it, and practise what it teaches, a vast amount of sickness, suffering and death, will be avoided. This book ought to be in every family in the land. It is greatly needed. Send for it at once, and read and practise what it teaches, and my word for it, you never will regret it.

A. P. MOORE.

The above valuable work is for sale at this office, and will be sent by mail to the address of any one remitting publisher's price—$1.50 per copy. AG'T.

TIME'S FAREWELL.

We have just published a tract with the above title, written by Bro. O. D. Woodruff. A good, stirring, timely tract; just the thing to scatter everywhere, and should be scattered by the thousands. Price by mail, 10 cents per dozen; 75 cents per hundred; $6.20 per thousand. AG'T.

CORRESPONDENTS.—As some are writing to Bro. Sheldon at the Crisis office, and on business relating to their Crisis, we would say, please direct all business pertaining to the Crisis, to MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass. If any wish to write to Bro. THE NEW YORK "RING."

The political matters in New York city are in a sad condition—very corrupt—and growing worse. The following is from a New York daily:—

"The Rev. D. C. Crawford, D. D., preached last evening at the West Eighteenth Street Methodist church on 'Political Reform,' from 1 Samuel 9: 6, 'And he said unto him, Behold now there is in this city a man of God, and he is an honorable man.'

This city is governed by a cabal called the 'Ring,' which is in turn controlled by all the thieves, murderers, rum-sellers, rum-drinkers, blacklegs, and keepers of houses of infamy within the city limits. They say to this Ring, 'Put in nomination for office such men as we want, or we won't vote for them.' The Ring obeys the commands of this ruffian rabble—this detestable 'riff-raff'—and what is the result upon that most important branch of the government, the judiciary? It has become corrupt, and the ermine has fallen on the shoulders of men before whom it is impossible to secure the conviction of the most notorious criminal."

"WHERE TO HAVE DEBATES."

Under the above heading the Apostolic Times says:—

"The choice of battle ground is a primary matter with all military strategists, and with political combatants, and it should be no less so with soldiers of the Lord. There is much to gain or lose by a debate, and the gain or loss depends on the locality almost as much as on the man. . . . Where the people are nearly all with you before the debate, you have almost nothing to gain by the most overwhelming victory, and everything to lose if you are defeated. In such a place it is a waste of time and strength to debate, and we should decline all challenges, on the ground that we have nothing to fight for. We can think of but one exception to this rule. If some erroneous system has commenced making serious inroads upon a community mostly given to the truth, then it would be proper to meet it somewhat in advance, and put a check upon it by debating its claims. By such an effort, skillfully executed, you may nip the blossom in its bud."

HOW ARE WE TO BE "ABSENT FROM THE BODY"?

The advocates of the disembodied existence of men, frequently refer to Paul's statement about being "absent from the body" to prove that men can live without a body. But such a thought is not even hinted at by the apostle, as is evident from the connection, for the death of man is not mentioned as the point of time at which we are to be absent from the body; but the time when the saints shall be immortalized is the epoch referred to: then every saint will be absent from the mortal body, not in the sense of existing without a body, but in the sense of having been changed to the immortal state, thus exchanging the "natural body" for the "spiritual body." Let us hear the apostle's statement: "For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened; not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life. Now he that hath wrought us for the self-same thing [that is, "that mortality might be swallowed up of life"] is God, who also hath given us the earnest of the Spirit. Therefore [that is, for this reason, that "mortality" is to "be swallowed up of life"] we are always confident, knowing that whilst we are at home in the ["natural"] body, we are absent from the Lord (for we walk by faith, not by sight); we are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the ["natural"] body, and to be present with the Lord" (2 Cor. 5: 5–8); not present with the Lord without a body, for "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout . . . the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them [with the resurrected saints] in the clouds, and so shall we ever be with the Lord." 1 Thess. 4: 16, 17. So we are to be "present with the Lord" in the resurrected state, but absent from the "natural" body, by virtue of a change to immortality, and not by being without a body.

If the "unclothed" state is equivalent to a disembodied state, as our opposers claim, then let it be remembered that Paul groaned "not" to "be unclothed," but to "be clothed upon"; but if the "unclothed" state is the state of mortality, and the "clothed" state is the state of immortality, as we claim, then Paul was groaning for a change to immortality, and God "hath wrought us for the self-same thing," and "therefore," or, on this principle, we prefer "to be absent from the body"—"the natural body"—"and to be present with the Lord"; not at death, but when "mortality is swallowed up of life," and the "spiritual body" shall take the place of the "natural body."

Thus the time to "be absent from the body" is at the resurrection, and not at death; and the manner is by a change from mortality to immortality, and not by dying. We are to be present with the Lord when we are caught up to meet him—not before. W. S.

HAVE WE THE TRUTH?

Are we really in possession of Bible truth ignored by the mass of religionists of the day; or have we really been following cunningly devised fables in proclaiming the coming of Christ to execute judgment, and to establish his kingdom on earth? Have we the truth of heaven on these great topics, or are we wedded to an error? If Bible testimony has anything to do in settling this question, we can arrive at but one conclusion, and that is, we have the truth. To decide otherwise, would be to disregard or depreciate the strongest testimony found in the Bible, and a great amount of it. And the principle that would admit of this course, would, when fully carried out, bid farewell to the Bible.

We are fully convinced that we have the truth. If so, we have light for this dark world that ought not to be kept under a bushel. It should be placed where others may be benefitted by it. And some effort should be made upon our part to enlighten others, even if it proves a tax on our time, our talent, and our money. It is our duty, in various ways, to advertise the truth of heaven, and hold it up in contrast with the popular fables of the age. This can be done in various ways by different classes.

What are we doing, as a people, to spread the truth we love so much, compared to what we might do? Are we half awake to the mighty responsibilities imposed upon us as the bearers of heaven's last dispensational truth to the world,—the coming of the King of glory to establish his heavenly kingdom? Are we doing half as much to spread this great message as its importance demands? Are we willing to let others grope in darkness when it is in our power to light up their pathway? God calls for action. Will we respond? Ministers are wanted in thousands of new fields, who can hold up the truth in its clearness. Will you help send them? Tracts, containing the truth in printed form, are wanted in many localities. Will you help print them, and also help scatter them? It costs money to print tracts, but they dispel much darkness. There are two ways in which this enterprise can be aided:

Purchase tracts by the hundred, and give them away. There is too little being done in this direction. Hundreds who are able to do it, are doing nothing; and many who think they cannot afford it, would be abundantly able if they had a little more religion. It is God's cause. Will you help?

Others can send donations to aid in printing, and let others scatter them. A little money spent in this way will do great good. Let tracts be put into every house. W. S.

"LABORERS" WANTED.

God wants them in his vineyard—in every part of it—not drones—but laborers; not well wishers, but "laborers"—men that will help gather sheaves, and not scatter them after they are gathered—"laborers" that labor not for self, but for God; not for honor or leadership, but for Christ and his precious cause; not such as labor well in fair weather, and quit the field when the storm comes, but such as are willing to endure hardships; not such as run well for a season, and shine brightly for a while, and then desert the cause, and bring reproach upon it, but constant laborers, in foul and fair weather. But such laborers are few. Let an earnest cry go up to the throne for "more laborers" of the right kind—such as God sends, and have the cause of God at heart, and feel for perishing men. And let such as have once been sent into the field, and have deserted it, or been idling their time away, speedily go to work again. Soon the harvest will be past. God calls you to duty now, and the trumpet will call you to a settlement soon. "Work while the day lasts." W. S.

DROWSY WATCHMEN.

Jehovah anciently protested against slumbering watchmen, and this divine aversion to ministerial slumber has not abated. It is the watchman's specific duty to "give the trumpet a certain sound"—a sound that the people can comprehend the import of, and thus be prepared for any emergency. A drowsy watchman cannot do this, but hazards his own life, and the life of all under his watchcare. So with the gospel watchman. He should be alive to the mighty responsibility devolving upon him, and always ready to give the trumpet a significant sound that will wake the people up to see their danger. God has placed us over slumberers; let us put trumpet to our mouths, and blow a telling blast; every watchman at his post now; the people must be aroused, or perish. Ho! drowsy watchman! put the trumpet to thy lips. The fate of the world is about to be sealed. The people slumber, and need to be awakened, and oh! my Lord, some of the watchmen, too, are sleeping. Awake before the trump of God shall sound, and seal your doom. W. S.

SHALL WE BUILD HOUSES OF WORSHIP?—Why not? Do we not need them? And is not the cause we love so well really suffering for want of them in various localities? And if we really believe that our mission and message is from heaven, and not of men, should we not try to get at the ears of the people, that we may thus reach their hearts? And would not a plain, accessible house of worship enable us to reach the ears of hundreds where we only gain access to scores in some dirty, third-story hall? I would not advise the erection of costly buildings, but plain, cheap chapels, all through the land. We ought to be a humble people, and let us evince this principle in building our chapels. We cannot compete with the rich societies around us, and should not try to; but we can build suitable houses of worship, and ought to do it. If we are within a few months of the end, our property cannot be destroyed in any better shape than in church edifices; and if a few short years await us in which to labor, we need them, and we cripple the cause by omitting to build. We are sometimes told that we shall deny our faith by building; but the precise truth is, we deny our faith by not building. Shall we do it longer? We ought to put up a hundred chapels this season. W. S.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 24th, 1870, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

LETTER FROM D. D. REED.

CALIFORNIA.

To the flock of God scattered abroad, Greeting:

It seemeth good to write you a few lines in regard to our labors on this Pacific coast. Myself and wife left our home at Santa Clara, Oct. 12th, on a preaching tour. We went direct to Jackson, Amador Co., a distance of one hundred miles, by rail to Galt, then by stage forty miles through the vallies, and winding up the foothills. Jackson is a mining town, this having been one of the richest mining counties in the State. We were greatly astonished at the amount of labor that had been expended, and is still being put forth, in search of gold. The entire surface of the earth has been turned up, and mountains removed. O! if men would seek for the true riches, as they do for the gold that perisheth, many more would be saved in the great gathering day.

We were invited to this place by Sr. Pitt, who has been in this State twenty years, and never seen but one Advent believer before. Her heart was made glad. Dr. Pitt, her husband, very kindly secured the Methodist church for us, and I spoke on Sunday evening to a large and attentive congregation; also on Friday eve, and gave away tracts and sold books. No great interest manifested, but the seed has been sown, and some of it may take root and spring up.

From there to Jane City, a nice little town in the foothills. Here we found some blessed saints, who received the word gladly. We purposed to stop only over Sunday, but the people were so anxious for us to remain longer, that we staid nine days, and had six meetings in the Baptist church, which was not occupied at the time. Meetings well attended, and increased in interest to the close; people deeply interested to hear these great truths, many of them never having heard of Adventists. They greatly desired us to locate there, offering us the church to worship in. Here is an open door for some one to enter in and reap a harvest. We made some dear friends, who helped us after a godly sort. One family, a man of influence and wealth, showed us much kindness, paying our bill at the hotel. May the Lord reward them with much grace and his Spirit to lead them into the truth, to which they listened with gladness.

Stopped one night in Sacramento, a flouring city, but saw no opening to plant the truth there at present. Went on to Suisan Valley, where we found a good home with Sister Scholl, who had invited us to come. The family was from Indiana, having crossed the Plains to this State ten years ago. They had not heard an Advent sermon in all that time. Sr. Willard will remember her—Lucy Scholl, a blessed saint, strong in the faith, talking it everywhere, and scattering tracts and papers. Her husband showed us much kindness.

We held eight meetings in a school-house, preached the truth full and square, the congregation steadily increasing, till some had to stand. I never saw such interest and attention. Many took hold of the truth, saying it was sound, consistent, and Bible, desiring to hear it preached all the time, and requesting us to remain longer. This is a rich, fertile, and beautiful valley, and one of the healthiest in the State. Sister Scholl and husband request any Advent ministers entering the State to come that way. We think it a good field.

Five miles distant are two fine towns on the railroad and bay. We purposed to have visited one, and the people desired it, but the hall, which was free, was undergoing repairs, and no other place could be obtained at that time. We accordingly took cars for Vallejo, a flourishing town of some seven thousand inhabitants, situated on the bay, connecting with Sacramento by rail, and with San Francisco by steamer. The government has a fine Navy Yard across the bay, on an island, and extensive works are carried on. Some fifteen hundred men are employed. The Kearsage, which sunk the Alabama, is hauled up here for repairs.

We were directed to an old saint here, Sr. Snow, from N. H., living with her daughter, who also is sound in the faith. Her husband visited the Methodist minister, who very kindly gave us his desk Sunday morning, and advertised through the paper Second Advent preaching. The house was filled to overflowing. Spoke with much freedom and power from Titus 3: 11. At the close many gathered around me, saying it was just such preaching as they liked; they had been starving for the word of God. We also found a number of old Adventists from the States, who had been here for years, and that was the first Advent sermon they had ever heard: Bro. Fike and Sr. Young and husband, from Maine, and others. Bro. Young took us home, and the others followed, and we spent an evening, such as we have not enjoyed in this State; a feast of fat things, talking, singing, and praying together. Here is a door opened, and a rich field for some one to locate in, to labor through the region round about, which is thickly dotted over with towns and villages.

From thence took boat to this place, Napa City, of three thousand inhabitants, the most beautiful little city and valley, surrounded by the most lovely mountains I have seen yet. The first day I visited the Baptist and Methodist ministers, to see if they would let me in on Sunday a part of the day. They both refused, but I succeeded in getting into the African church Sunday morning. Then I tried the halls; thought I would hire one if I could do no better, and finally secured the Court House hall free, the best place in the city; and thus the Lord has opened the doors for his word to be preached here. Praise his name!

I never had such help from God in preaching as of late, and the word cuts and searches the heart. It has not lost its power, thank God. The Lord is with us, directing our every step. My health was never as good as at present, and I purpose to keep in the field as long as health and money last. Praise the Lord for the glorious privilege of sounding this great and precious truth, away out on this distant coast. The way is being prepared for others to follow, and the Lord will move upon some to come on ere long. Pray for us. Yours in hope,

SECRET SOCIETIES.

MR. EDITOR:—I suppose the readers of your paper would be glad to learn something of the proceedings of the first State convention of the National Association of Christians, opposed to secret societies, and especially to Freemasonry, held at Syracuse, N. Y., in Shakespeare Hall, on the 15th, 16th, and 17th of Nov., 1870. The convention met on the 15th, at seven o'clock P. M., when a large proportion of the delegates from the different towns in the State were present; besides gentlemen from other states, and citizens who were interested in the subject of the meeting, nearly filling the floor of the large hall. Mr. S. D. Greene, of Massachusetts, was called upon to open the meeting by prayer, and after about half an hour spent in prayer and exhortation, the convention was called to order by the Rev. A. Crooks, of the Weslyan Publishing House, and a citizen of Syracuse. He said he would nominate for temporary chairman a gentleman who was perfectly familiar with the abduction of Morgan, and who was at the time an officer of the village of Batavia, and a member of the same lodge to which Morgan belonged; a gentleman who had delivered eight hundred and ninety lectures on Anti-Masonry, and had traveled fifteen thousand miles in laboring for the cause for which the convention assembled. He concluded by nominating the Hon. Mr. Greene, of Massachusetts, and the nomination was ratified.

Mr. Greene took the chair, and after merely thanking the convention for the honor they had conferred upon him, waved further remarks till a temporary clerk was elected. Rev. Mr. Stratton, of Mexico, Oswego Co., was chosen Secretary. The Rev. Mr. Salisbury, of Seneca Falls, invoked the divine blessing.

The Rev. Mr. Crooks then delivered an address of welcome.

The Secretary, the Rev. Mr. Stratton, inquired if Mr. McAllister, editor of the Christian Statesman, was present, and added that he had been selected to reply to the welcoming address. As Mr. McAllister did not respond, Mr. Stratton said the duty would devolve upon him, and he proceeded to discharge it.

The Rev. Mr. Crooks suggested that the chairman make some opening remarks. After some preliminary statements of Mr. Greene, as to the privileges which the American people enjoy, under the Constitution, among which he cited that of free discussion, he commenced what he said was a detailed history of the abduction of Morgan, founded upon what he had seen, and also upon what he had heard. It will be remembered that Mr. Greene is the author of a book* claiming to fully expose the secrets of Masonry, and the "exposition" which he gave last night was almost in the language of his book. After he had spoken nearly three-quarters of an hour, he was interrupted by Mr. Crooks, who reminded him that all he was saying could be found in his book, and that the people were expected to buy it. There was business to be transacted. Cries of "go on," "go on," came from the audience, and a delegate moved "that we hear the rest of Mr. Green's statements, irrespective of everything else."

Part of the proceedings of the second day.

President Blanchard submitted the following address to the people of the State of New York:

The theory of the christian religion, as we receive it from the Bible, is this, that "God was in Christ, reconciling the world to himself;" and that no man can come unto the Father, who is infinite and unapproachable, but by Christ, but that he saves to the uttermost all who come unto God by him.

We need scarcely add that the secret orders of this country, which claim to bring men to goodness and to God by mere human contrivances, and ceremonies, which have no divine warrant, appear to us to be simply anti-Christ revival worships; whose very nature is hostile to Christianity; as counterfeit money is to the genuine; killing it out by rivalship and substitution. In short, we regard the secret orders, not as belonging to and a part of Christianity, but as a part of and belonging to the false man-invented religions which keep Christ from coming, and which are, and have been in all ages, Satan's chief reliance to govern and curse mankind.

The political nature of the secret orders is of course, and of necessity, despotism; since free government cannot be founded and maintained on falsehood; and no other falsehood is so false as false religion. The fact seen by bare inspection of the map, that there is no popular government outside the christian religion, is not an accident; but a simple necessary consequence of religions invented by man, administered by priests, and inhabited by devils.

We are therefore resolved to have no fellowship with the secret orders in this country; nor will we knowingly vote for their abettors; we cannot bid them God speed at the communion table, nor support them by the ballot, because we know they are destroying both Church and State.

On this simple, plain ground we ask you to join and aid us in the holy work of ridding the world, by ridding the country, of these dark orders:—

1st. By aiding our national and auxiliary associations by your persons and your funds.

2d. By aiding the circulation of our national organs, The Christian Cynosure, and all other papers, books and tracts which expose these works of darkness and seek their destruction.

The Hon. Gerrit Smith addressed the Convention. He said he had been a life-long laborer against evils of every kind, and though he had reached an age when he could no longer be active, his desires for the uprooting of all wrongs was as strong as ever. He took positive grounds against all secret societies and social "clubs." He stated his objections in his usual forcible and argumentative manner.

The Rev. Mr. Bernard, author of "Light on Masonry," read a short address, accompanying it with references to the times of Morgan's disappearance. He is now eighty-two years old, and forty-four years of his life, he said, have been devoted to exposing the secrets of Masonry.

Mr. Griswold, of Tompkins county, another aged gentleman, made brief remarks.

The Rev. Mr. Remington, of Detroit, argued the subject from a political stand point, and supported the address.

The Rev. Dr. McLaren, of Geneva, thought the address was not radical enough.

The address was unanimously adopted without further debate.

The convention, on the whole, was a perfect success; if determination, harmony, numbers, and general interest on the subject, deep rooted in christian hearts, flowing together from all the different denominations of christians, can be a success. B. SEAL.

Correspondence.

From Bro. A. D. Abbott.

MR. EDITOR:—In a recent issue of your paper, which you were kind enough to forward to my address, I read a communication from the pen of A. N. Seymour, in which he makes mention of the fact that the Sabbath before he had listened to a sermon preached by the writer, at Algansee, Mich., in which also he mentions some of my personal experience, following my change of views on the "life and death" question. I hardly think myself entitled to the high estimate in which this brother seems to hold me as a preacher of the gospel. Indeed, with humbleness of mind, I have always felt that when called to preach, the grace was given to one of the "least of all saints," and have only desired to "minister as of the ability that God giveth, that he in all things might be glorified through Jesus Christ our Lord."

At no period of my life have I felt more like sitting at the feet of the humblest disciple, and especially at the feet of Christ, to learn of him, than I have for a few months past. In common with almost every one of my age, I was early taught to believe in the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, and in all those views and doctrines that are necessarily based upon it. Professing religion at an early age, I became a member of the regular Baptist church, of which denomination my father was a devoted minister. Before I was twenty-one years of age, I was licensed by the church to preach the gospel, and was ordained April 10th, 1846. I still hold my connection with this denomination. I am not aware, as yet, that my change of views on the subject above referred to would be regarded by them as a heresy of sufficient importance to sunder the relation.

It would seem that every one, who makes any pretensions to being known as an intelligent christian, should become so rooted and grounded in every point of christian theology, before he reaches the age of forty-eight years, that he would find no occasion at that period of life to change his views on any one point. But will my readers stop for one moment and reflect thoughtfully? Will you ask yourselves, From whence have I derived my religious opinions? How perfectly easy it is for us to gather up our ideas, as they come floating to us on the surface of human life. In our early childhood, we sit on the lap of maternal tenderness, and listen wonderingly as mother tells us that "baby is an angel now"; that "our little angel has gone home to live with God"; and as we grow older, we listen to, and try ourselves to sing, the hymns that embody the soul's immortality, and that "death is the gate to endless joy." Then come the sermons, the prayers, and the exhortations; and so, without being aware of it ourselves, we have become indoctrinated in our childhood. And then, if upon entering life's work we give ourselves up to the study of christian theology, we find all our text books loaded down with these ideas; hence, is it any wonder that, "ground in such a mill, the grist is what it is"? And then, how exceeding hard it is to give up long-cherished views on any subject. But the honest mind must submit, whatever it may cost, when truth is presented.

The conflict through which the writer has passed, during the last few months, is the most severe that has occurred in all life's history. But what indescribable joy takes possession of the soul, when once the victory is obtained. How exceedingly precious the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead becomes, when we see that this is really the basis of our hope. For, as the apostle affirms, "if there be no resurrection of the dead, . . . then they which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished."

The doctrine of the resurrection constituted a large share of the subject matter of the preaching of the apostles; but how little is this subject dwelt upon by the preachers of the present day. This is not so much a matter of surprise, when we consider how paradoxical are these confessions of faith. For where is the necessity for a resurrection from the dead, if "death is the gate to endless joy" to the believer? And what necessity for looking anxiously for the return of our Lord, if the saints are taken to heaven when they die? I can now see clearly why I have preached so little in the past on the subject of Christ's coming. I can see why I should preach more on this subject in the future. How can one hold his peace when these truths are received in the love of them? A. D. ABBOTT.

Reading, Mich., Oct. 17th, 1870.

From Bro. P. W. Hough.

Dear and beloved brethren and sisters, who love our glorious Savior, and are waiting for his return, who will soon take the vail away that is now cast over his people, swallow up death in victory, wipe away all our tears forever, and give us the inheritance that was promised in the garden, through the woman's seed, restored and made glorious by his wonder-working power, whereby he is able to subdue all things unto himself. We shall then "receive the reward of the inheritance." Col. 3: 24. Seeing that we look for such things, let us be diligent, that we "may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless." 2 Pet. 3: 14. He will have his bride presented to himself without "spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish." Eph. 5: 27.

This moral condition is needful to qualify us to stand with loins girt with truth, and we like unto men that wait for their Lord. Then we shall be ready to open our lips and say, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him; . . . we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation." Isa. 25: 9. Let us see then that we "walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise; redeeming the time, because the days are evil." Eph. 5: 15, 16. Let us labor to have the mind of Christ, drink deep into his Spirit, and thus shall we "be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God." Eph. 3: 18, 19.

Dear brethren and sisters, there never was more need than now for us to cultivate every virtue enjoined in the Scriptures, and exhibit all the fruits of the Spirit in every-day life, bringing into captivity every imagination that exalts itself above the simplicity of Christ; that we may be ready for our change when the Master comes. Yours, waiting for speedy redemption, P. W. HOUGH.

P. S.—And still they come. When in this place last Lord's day, after service eight presented themselves for baptism. This is some of the fruit of the campmeetings held in this place. Seven were baptized at the grove-meeting, ten in September, and eight now; making twenty-five in all. They are still holding on by faith. It was raining at the time of service, yet some went into the water shouting, and some came up out of the water giving an expression of their feelings of joy with shouts of praise. It was good to be there. I am now eight miles north. I have given five lectures, and five have already started to serve God. They spoke last night of their purpose to live as true christians. A prayer-meeting will be inaugurated. To God be the glory. P. W. HOUGH.

BRO. GRANT:—Our conference has proved a blessing to the church in Pittsfield. Bro. I. Damman came in the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ, and remained with us over two Sabbaths. Obstacles have been removed, and some of the wandering sheep brought back to the fold of Christ, and are now rejoicing again in the pardoning love of God. O praise the Lord for his goodness. The best of it is, the good work is still going on. O Lord, help us to feel that we are about a great work, and do all we can to pray men in Christ's stead to be reconciled to God. The bride will soon make herself ready, and the kingdom come. Amen, even so, come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly.

BRO. C. F. SWEET writes:—"To-day I received a note from a sister living near Rome, N. Y., containing a donation, and requesting me to inquire through the Crisis if there are any believers in Rome who feel anxious to have a meeting in that city, and will also provide a place in which to meet. If so, will they correspond with me at Saratoga, N. Y., immediately?"

INCIDENT AT THE DAILY PRAYER MEETING.

Some years ago the son of a distinguished New York politician and statesman was married. The wedding was the sensation of the day. The father of the groom was the leading man in the national councils. The gifts to the bride were very gorgeous. Rare and costly diamonds were abundant, for the lady was beautiful and popular. Times have changed since the bridal day. The family estate has been sold. The bridegroom is under a cloud, having been the tool of others in using Government funds. The other day, at the close of the Fulton street meeting, Mr. Lanphier was approached by a lady dressed in deep mourning, who was surpassingly beautiful, and had a wonderful fascination in her manner. The lady presented Mr. L. with a diamond ring, worth not less than $200, and requested him to sell it and appropriate the proceeds to the suffering poor in lower New York. He remonstrated with the lady, asking her whether she was really called upon to make that sacrifice. She replied with great decision that her mind was made up; she had no more use for diamonds; she had renounced the vanities of the world, and should henceforth live for other things. She exhibited a valuable diamond cross, which she intended to present to the —— church, to be devoted to the same use. She left the valuable gift and retired. And this was the beautiful bride, whose brilliant wedding a short time since was the envy of the fashionable world.

The Central Baptist contains the query, "Would you baptize a man whom you believed to be pious, and who yet did not wish to join the Baptist church?" The editor answers "No."

This needs no other comment than the language of Peter at Cesarea: "Can any man forbid water, that these should be baptized, who have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?"—Christian Union.

THE BLACK SEA QUESTION.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 6. The Russian Government has forwarded dispatches to the governments at Vienna, Florence, Tours and Constantinople with regard to the Black Sea question. They are similar to those addressed to Brunnow, Russian representative to London. The general tenor of these dispatches is that the Russian demands are essential to the maintenance of peace in Europe.

THE "EMPEROR OF GERMANY."

MUNICH, Dec. 6. The King of Bavaria has sent a note to King William inviting him to assume the title of Emperor of Germany. The assent of the authorities in other States is also expected.

RUSSIA PREPARING FOR WAR.

The Russian Government has in its employ a number of American workmen in Russia engaged in the manufacture of mitrailleurs. There is ample evidence of other kinds that Russia is preparing for war on a grand scale. Since Granville's surrender to Gortschakoff the result of a conference of the Powers is considered nugatory so far as England is concerned.

A CHANGE IN THE CAMPAIGN.

The army of the Loire is still over 200,000 strong. In another month 800,000 Frenchmen will be in arms. Paris may fall. The campaign has changed in its character. It is fast becoming a detached warfare, amid the maneuvreing in open country. France herself is unconquerable. The Government announces the capitulation of Orleans, and the withdrawal of the whole army of the Loire. The direction the army has taken is not stated, but it is believed to be toward Gien.

LONDON, Dec. 6. [Special to the New York World.] The English Government has given a contract for sixty batteries, eight guns each, of Gatling's mitrailleurs, to be made in America.

TOURS, Dec. 7. Gen. Palladines retreated from Orleans with a force believed to be 200,000 strong. He had 500 cannon. The government authorities wished him to remain at Orleans and receive the Prussian attack, but they gave way to the general's opinion that the place was untenable. Subsequently the general fought to the utmost but was powerless to effect anything.

At half past eleven o'clock the Germans demanded the evacuation of city, threatening to bombard it in case of refusal. The Prussians captured but a few prisoners, and no ammunition.

BERLIN, Dec. 6. A despatch from Wilhelmshhoe, announces that Marshal Bazaine is seriously ill. He has been prostrated by nervousness since the capitulation of Metz.

BERLIN, Dec. 5. Queen Augusta has received the following:—

"VERSAILLES, Sunday, midnight. After a two days' battle, in which the army of the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg was mainly engaged, Mansteen's corps captured the St. Jean railway station and the suburbs of Orleans. Thirty guns and 1000 prisoners were taken. The Prussian loss was moderate. Wrangel's division suffered most. The Prussians found nine cannon and much ammunition on the field before Amiens.

(Signed) WILLIAM."

CONSTANTINOPLE, Dec. 6. Ali Pasha, Minister of Foreign Affairs, has despatched notes to the Turkish Ambassadors at all the European courts, announcing that Turkey accepts the proposition of a conference to settle the Black Sea question, and will send a representative thereto.

FLORENCE, Dec. 6. The deputation of fifteen members from the Constituent Corps, appointed to visit this city and present the Crown of Spain to the Duke of Aosta, waited upon him on Monday, and delivered to him the offer of the crown. In accepting it, the Duke made the following brief reply: "I shall follow loyally the example of constitutional tradition with honesty, above the struggle of parties.

LONDON, Dec. 8. The French government has unconstitutionally accepted the proposal for a conference with England, Austria, Russia, and Prussia, to be held at London, for the discussion and settlement of the Black Sea question, arising out of the treaty of 1856.

Mr. Gladstone, replying to the Irish memorial concerning the occupation of Rome by Victor Emanuel, says: "The Government will duly consider all that relates to the Pope's dignity, and that the removal of his freedom or independence is a legitimate matter for careful attention. During late uncertainties with respect to Rome, England had made provisions to afford the Pope any necessary protection, and the government would continue to give the question careful attention. Mr. Gladstone had heard with great satisfaction of the intention of the Italian government to defend his holiness the Pope's freedom and independence, and to adequately provide for the support of his dignity."

BERLIN, Dec. 9. King William accepts the title of Emperor of Germany.

AN ARMISTICE ASKED FOR BY THE FRENCH.

BERLIN, Dec. 10. The government has received a communication from M. Gambetta who applies for an armistice to allow time for an election to the assembly by the French people. M. Gambetta states that the French government will not insist on revictualling the city of Paris during the cessation of hostilities.

TOURS, Dec. 10. The fighting between the army of the Loire near Beaugency, and the German forces under the Grand duke of Mecklenburg, continues unabated.

BISMARCK'S LAST STROKE.

AMSTERDAM, Dec. 10. It is rumored here that the Count von Bismarck has informed the government of Luxembourg, that Russia cannot longer respect the neutrality of the former, she having permitted the French to violate the laws of neutrality repeatedly. This rumor causes much alarm.

LONDON, Dec. 10. A general impression has prevailed since last week in circles likely to be accurately informed on the subject that the chances of a restoration of the Emperor Napoleon to supreme power in France are steadily improving.

The argument used in favor of a restoration is the prospect of the near advent of most ruinous consequences in many of the most poverty-stricken sections of Germany in case of a much longer protraction of the war with France.

The report is current in London, and is generally credited, that Emperor Alexander of Russia had written an autograph letter to Napoleon at Wilhelmshohe, and its contents are believed to hold out great encouragement.

Dec. 11. Advices from the Hague state that regulations for the cession of Luxembourg are nearly completed.

Later advices from Paris by balloon have been received. A great movement of troops was taking place on Friday, and great activity prevailed in the military department, showing that another sortie was imminent.

Gen. Ducrot has issued an address to the troops, saying that the conflict has ceased for the moment, and calling upon all Frenchmen to raise their hearts to the height of sacrifice that the holy cause demands.

THE CONFERENCE ON THE RUSSIAN QUESTION.

LONDON, Dec. 11. The conference between the great powers to the treaty of Paris, appointed for the discussion of the Eastern question, will be held in this city during the first week in January.

JAPANESE GOODS OVERLAND.—Nineteen car loads of Japan tea and three of silk arrived at New York 3d inst., from San Francisco, the full time from Yokohama being thirty-five days—twenty-three of which were by steamer and eleven by rail. It is stated that recent arrangements have been made whereby all the tea from China and Japan, by the Pacific Mail steamers at San Francisco, will be forwarded overland.

Religious Items.

An Iowa home missionary gives the following sample of his Sunday work:

I go eight miles over a very rough road; one steep hill is over a half mile long; turn round the high bluff; cross a stream; go through a piece of woods; find a stone house a mile from any house; tie my horse to a tree, put a little bundle of hay before him that I have brought in my buggy; go into the church; I find a Sabbath school and a man who has come ten miles to superintend it, and has done so for over ten years! When the service is over I go back to C. There is no place for dinner for me or my horse. I tie my horse to another tree, go into church, attend another Sabbath school, and, after meeting, go a mile and a half to my home.—Calaveras county, California, has a population of 13,000 inhabitants, and but one Protestant minister.—At the anniversary of the Central Church Sabbath School in Bangor, Nov. 13, seventy-nine Bibles were presented to members who had been perfect in their lessons during the year.—At the last communion season of the First Church in Oberlin, nearly a thousand participated in the service. President Finney, departing from his usual custom, invited all who thought they were followers of Christ and willing to do his will in all things, to commune, whether members of any church or not.—The Christians in Damascus are again suffering persecution and a general massacre is feared.—A Protestant organization has been formed in the city of Valladolid which has taken the name of "The Church of the Martyrs." Three centuries ago many suffered martyrdom in this city for the faith of Jesus. Now each Sunday, and on two evenings of the week, the devoted young evangelist conducts public services which are crowded, the room holding about one thousand persons.—The Pope is extremely dejected at the loss of his temporal power.—The Lutheran Synod of Northern Indiana has elected as a life director of its missionary society King William of Prussia.—The Lutheran Synod of Maryland, at its recent session in Emmittsburg, resolved to receive no student as a beneficiary who indulges in the use of tobacco.

In Brief.

A Paris letter, per balloon, says seven hundred have gone crazy since the siege commenced; the abuse of spirituous liquors is said to have caused six hundred of these cases. The writer says he never before saw so many drunken people in the streets. People drink to drown care; they often drown reason with it.—Marshal MacMahon declined to associate himself with the intrigue for the restoration of the Emperor Napoleon, and since his convalescence resolutely refuses all invitations to proceed to Cassel.—The French balloons, with a fair wind, go about as fast as the express trains on American railroads.—Private letters from Rome state a spiritualistic attendant is retained constantly in the company of King William, over whom he exercises complete influence.

HE LEADS US ON.

He leads us on,
By paths we did not know,
Upward he leads us, though our steps be slow.
Though oft we faint and falter by the way,
Though storms and darkness oft obscure the day,
Yet when the clouds are gone,
We know He leads us on.

He leads us on,
Through all the unquiet years;
Past all our dreamland hopes, and doubts, and fears,
He guides our steps. Through all the tangled maze
We know his will is done;
And still He leads us on.

And He, at last,
After the weary strife,
After the restless fever we call life—
After the dreariness, the aching pain,
The wayward struggles which have proved in vain—
After our toils are past,
Will give us rest at last.

For the World's Crisis.

JUDGMENT TO COME.

Judgment is of two-fold character, judicial and executive. Judicial is the interpretation and application of law; executive carries that interpretation into effect. To illustrate. The people judicially decided that Gen. Grant should be President, Nov. 3d, 1868; but not till the 4th of March following was the executive conferred. The interval found the President elect possessor of a title he could not appropriate; suspended in the vacuum between the judicial and executive. Man's probationary conflict terminates at death, and the judicial verdict is then sealed up. From this point, he is suspended in the vacuum of silent unconsciousness, awaiting the executive. It is written (Heb. 9:27, 28), "As it is appointed unto man once to die, but after this the judgment; so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."

At death is the point where the breath goeth forth, the thoughts perish, and all consciousness ceases. (Psalms 146: 3, 4.) After death is the point where revival is reached, and from the point at death to the point after death is the condition in death. While in this vacuum, their identity is lost, and they are not known or recognized, except as its restoration is anticipated by resurrection; for, "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." (Matt 22: 32.) The case of Rachel's children is proof of this fact. (Jer. 31: 15-17.) Before death, they are recognized as children. In death it is written, they were not; but when they shall be raised from the dead, and their identity restored, they are recognized as children again; therefore, as there is no recognized identity in death, and there can be no executive judgment without identity; all parties in death must be raised out of death, in order to be judged after death, as the apostle affirms.

There can be no after death to those who forever remains in death. The apostles's "So," in the 28th verse, clearly demonstrates this; for, the second appearing of Christ depends entirely upon the after death condition. If he never reaches this, but remains in death, he can never come the second time; hence, the second-coming of Christ and judgment, being after death, neither can ever take place if the parties remain forever suspended in the vacuum, whose awful silence and darkness admits no wisdom, knowledge, work or device. (Eccl. 9: 10.) Leave our Lord Jesus Christ there, with its door fast bolted, and we extinguish the last ray of light for the future. In the great redemptive scheme, he is what the lungs are to the physical system, or the mainspring to the watch. The door of eternal life opens with his resurrection, or is forever closed without it. A judgment to come is clearly revealed to the ungodly, together with a sure and unmistakable process to reach it. By transition from unconsciousness to consciousness, they appear before the judgment seat of Christ after death, subjects of executive judgment.

No law, either divine or human, credits any loss or injury the guilty may suffer from casuality or calamity, towards its penalty, technically speaking. For instance; a burglar receives a two-years' sentence, but before his incarceration, is taken violently ill; would the law credit his confinement from sickness, towards its penalty, because he was as securely imprisoned by disease, as though an inmate of the penitentiary? Again: a murderer is discovered, on the morning of his execution, suspended in his cell, and apparently lifeless; the vigorous efforts to restore consciousness prove that human law makers will not accept the culprit's death by the same method, within a few feet of the appointed place, and but an hour in advance of the appointed time. The law makes legal strangulation its penalty, and when the culprit is officially choked to death, it is satisfied. A thousand other deaths would not suffice.

As human government carefully guards and protects the life of the criminal, till by its own hand and at its own appointed time, it takes that life; so, the divine Lawgiver will allow no obstacle, not even death, to prevent the execution of sinners at his own appointed time; because, He has appointed a day for that purpose. (Acts 17: 31.) The human race are not responsible for being suspended in the vacuum between the judicial and executive, with the loss of the present life. The sinful acts of fourscore years, do not cause it; the utmost stretch of faith and holy living for a like period cannot prevent it. Sin and death came into the world by one man, (Rom. 5: 12); and surely, the stream is not at fault for impurities, while the fountain is corrupt. The sin of the first Adam scattered the disease throughout the entire race. All are afflicted with the terrible malady, and hopelessly unable to cure themselves. The first man's sin is the cause, a world of sinners the result; therefore, being cursed through him with an incurable disease, the loss of the present life is a consequence, for which they are in no degree responsible, hence it is a calamity. As individuals, their criminality consists, not in being sinners by nature, but for refusing to be saved from sin, since provision to that effect has been made through our Lord Jesus Christ. This is the great sin which demands executive judgment, and, as the time for its administration is neither before death, or while in death, but after death; the divine law applies on its penalty neither calamity before death, or the calamity of death, but dictates its own terms after death.

It may be asked, Why raise the wicked dead, except to give them a sip from the cup of our orthodox friends' eternal torment, and let them die again? Suppose our brother, who thinks thus, sees a murderer ready to perish in a burning prison; we marvel whether, to save his theory, he would coolly allow the wretch to roast alive, notwithstanding the rescue would prolong his anguish and suffering weeks or months before his execution. The conditon of the rescued murderer and resurrected wicked are precisely alike; both being under sentence of death, and awaiting execution; the only possible distinction being the amount of power required to bring them to justice. In both cases the parties are reserved for execution, for "the Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished." 2 Pet. 2: 9. God's unlimited power takes the wicked out of the grave, our brother's puny arm pulls the culprit out of the fire; thus the argument that avails against the resurrection of the wicked is equally available against the act of our brother, who practically becomes a theoretical suicide.

As individual identity is lost in death, and there can be no executive without identity, God reproduces the identity by resurrection, when judgment follows after death, as it is written. When a lawgiver is unable to enforce the executive, judicial decision becomes null and void. Death is the wages of sin (Rom. 6: 23), and yet, the death state, alone considered, is not the penalty. If so, it is entirely superfluous to affix the death penalty to any law whatever; for the guilty will as surely reach the death state without, as with it. The time, manner, and circumstances attending the criminal's death must be controlled by the law, and entirely at its disposal; thus they form a component part of the penalty, and, when associated with death, make up the penalty. Because this fact is frequently lost sight of, an undue prejudice is created against a scriptural doctrine.

The word of God depicts the day of judgment in fearful colors, and the picture is not overdrawn, when we associate the sinner's death with the terrors of legal investment, while the courses of nature are turned out of their way by the withdrawal of omnipotent power; when the sun, hiding her face, refuses the light of day, the mountains rock, the earth reels, and passes to her dissolution state; then amid the chaotic prelude to the new heavens and new earth, we discover the fearful nature of the sinner's death penalty, as with gnashing teeth and horrid wails a last cry of anguish arises, when they disappear in old earth's baptismal fire and are lost forever. Beyond this, the sinner receives no further extension of the life lease. At the great day of judgment, when the death warrant of the divine law is legally enforced, the sinner reaches his end. He is utterly lost and hopelessly destroyed; his identity is reduced to ashes, and buried in the depths of eternal oblivion; he sinks beneath the fearful weight of divine wrath, which precludes beyond the possibility of recovery the boon he so dearly loved—"his life." Inspiration asks, "What shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?" 1 Pet. 4: 17.

There can be no continuance of anything that has come to an end. Inspiration answers its own question (Jas. 1: 15): "Sin when it is finished bringeth forth death." So, the sinner inevitably finishes his course in death. If, however, sinners continue to exist eternally, heaping up an unending, indescribable, blasphemous amount of sin, it must be admitted, sin can never be finished.

We leave them in their legitimate, scriptural lodging place; and conclude this to be the end of them; being relieved with the thought that one day the universe of God will resound with songs of the redeemed, and not a note of blasphemy to disturb. Angry nations, distressed, perplexed, and stormy wind fulfilling his word; signs in the heavens, and wonders in the earth, iniquity abounding, and love growing cold; a lukewarm church, and stock-jobbing religion, abounding with dross, and bankrupt in grace, in audible tones proclaim the day of judgment at hand. Then, the dawn of an existence, unending and fair, to the righteous will be given. God help us to be there. O. D. WOODRUFF.

HEAD AND HEART.

What is saving religion? is a question which concerns all, and should interest all. James says: "Pure religion, and undefiled before God and the Father, is this: to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."—Jas. 1: 27. This embraces the whole, but leaves room for much more to be said. "To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction" is what any one may do, and even minister to their necessities, and yet be void of saving religion; but "to keep himself unspotted from the world" requires a change in the affections, or rather they must be turned into another channel from that in which they naturally flow. For, by nature, we love the world, the pleasures of the world, the friendship of the world, and to keep unspotted from it while in this condition is impossible, and all effort to do so will only prove like a wheel turning on its own axle; it will make no progress. The head may be educated, the judgment convinced, and yet there is a lack of propelling power. There is no personal acquaintance with Christ, no asking and receiving; and the result is, no glory in the soul. But when the heart is sanctified unto God, or set apart for him, then his yoke is easy and his burden light. Then, with David, we can say, "O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men." "O how love I thy law; it is my meditation all the day." "My soul hath kept thy testimonies; and I love them exceedingly." "I hate vain thoughts, but thy law do I love." "How sweet are thy words unto my taste; yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth." "Through thy precepts I get understanding; therefore I hate every false way." In these expressions of David, we see the affections are changed; the heart is renewed by the power of the Holy Spirit; and, although some part of his life has furnished food for scoffers and skeptics ever since the account has been written, yet we see his religion was a religion of the heart, and not his understanding only.

Dear reader, is not Jesus worthy of our affections? He who stands as our Mediator praying and making intercession for us, is he not our friend? is he not wooing, drawing and urging us to be reconciled to God and to his government? Is not our judgment convinced that he is our friend? Then why not love him? why not give him the heart? It is all he wants. He says, "My son, give me thine heart." Is not his character unspotted from all evil? and is he not every way worthy? and more than this, has he not set great inducements before us for placing our affections upon him? He offers life and good days after this night of weeping is ended. Joy will come in the morning, and an eternal weight of glory. O that I could persuade one poor, down-trodden, oppressed, friendless, suffering son or daughter of Adam to love him; for I feel that I am an unprofitable servant of his, I have done so little for him who has done so much for me. I sometimes fear the blood of souls will be found upon me.

The above for officers and committees were elected as reported. Adjourned until the conclusion of the public service from the stand.

Met as adjourned. The President in the chair. Prayer offered by Bro. J. G. Smith. The following ministers, by vote, were made members of the conference: J. C. Smith, N. C. Twombly, and A. P. Moore.

The following report of the Treasurer was adopted.

J. G. SMITH, Treasurer.

The report of the ministerial committee was made by its chairman, Eld. J. Couch, who stated as follows: During the past year four brethren have been ordained to the work of the gospel ministry by the imposition of hands and prayer; viz: J. H. Dadmun, Nashua, N. H.; Mark Stevens, Brookfield, N. H.; Z. T. Wood; John B. Deering, Bartlett, N. H.

The conference next listened to the report of the quarterly conference committee, Bro. T. W. Piper reporting as follows:—

To the members of the New Hampshire Adv. Chris. Conference:

Dear Brethren:—It is with deep gratitude to our heavenly Father, that your committee report to you the great blessings which God has bestowed on the quarterly sessions of this conference during the past year, 1870. The first quarterly session was held in the city of Dover, at Ham's Hall, Wednesday, Jan. 12th, and continued over the following Lord's day. The attendance was small at first, but increased in numbers and interest until its close, so that our place became too strait for us. There was preaching during the meeting by Elders Couch and Piper. Other preaching brethren were present, who rendered efficient aid. All seemed to feel a deep interest in the word preached. Some resolved anew to be more faithful, while others, for the first time, started to seek the Lord. God was truly present by his Spirit to bless. All felt that it was good to be there. There was no business to come before the conference, consequently no session for that purpose was called.

The second session was held at Loudon, commencing Feb. 24th, and holding over the Sabbath. There was preaching during the meeting by Elders J. G. Smith, A. Damon, J. Couch, and T. W. Piper. Other faithful laborers helped in the good work. Also brethren and sisters from Alton, Pittsfield, Laconia, Meredith, and other towns, came in with warm hearts, which added much to the interest of the meeting. Saturday, P. M., Brn. Dadmun and Wood were set apart to the solemn work of the gospel ministry by prayer and the laying on of hands. The congregation on the Sabbath was large, and the interest good. The fruits of the Spirit were truly manifested by the lovers of Jesus during the meeting, and the gospel, as announced by the angels at our Savior's birth, as embraced in the following: "peace on earth and good will to men," did shine gloriously to all present. [No report was made of the third session of the quarterly conference, for reasons not known to the Secretary.]

The fourth quarterly session was held at Whitefield, N. H., with the church of which Bro. N. Wheeler is pastor. There was preaching during the meeting by Elders Sibley, Shaw, and Piper. Bro. Wheeler, and other faithful servants of the Lord, did most heartily cooperate in the good work. The meeting was truly a success. One could but feel that it was one of the truly sweet seasons of a lifetime. There were those who walked seventy miles, or more, to enjoy this feast with the people of God. There were faithful representations from the Queen's dominions, and four or five counties in New Hampshire. Such persons know how to appreciate the blessings attending gatherings of this kind. It was truly heart-cheering to listen to the warm testimonies which were presented in favor of the cause that lies so near the pilgrim's heart. An interest has been awakened in this part of the old Granite State in relation to having a mission tent, in which the gospel of the soon coming King may be proclaimed, new ground broken up, and the seed of the gospel of the kingdom sown. This interest is confined to Coos county and the upper part of Grafton.

During this meeting, the officers of the New Hampshire conference, who were present, appointed the following a committee to solicit funds to add to what had already been raised for procuring the tent: A. Gording, N. Wheeler, I. M. Aldrich, and Brn. Holton and Young. This committee has attended to duties assigned it, the tent has been procured, and commenced its mission work. Two meetings have been held in it since its canvas has been unfolded, and spread for the protection of heaven's ambassadors, and the pilgrim's Bethel. May this tent be indeed a Bethel in which praises to God may be heard, and where the clarion notes of truth may be sounded out, and the banner of the gospel unfurled, and be instrumental under God of accomplishing a great and good work in northern New Hampshire.

There was no written report from the protracted-meeting committee handed to the Secretary; but a verbal one was rendered by the chairman of that committee, that was very satisfactory to the conference. Several protracted meetings, and also tent-meetings, have been held in the State during the year with cheering results. God has truly blessed this department of christian labor the past year. Adjourned till Friday, nine o'clock A. M.

Met as adjourned. Prayer was offered by Joseph Kimball. The conference next listened to reports of ministers. These reports seemed the sweetest part of this annual gathering. God has greatly blessed the efforts (though feeble they have been) of his servants the past year. By vote, the conference adjourned till after the P. M. service from the stand.

Met according to adjournment. Bro. Couch in the chair. Meeting opened with prayer by Bro. D. N. Chadsey. Conference continued to hear reports from ministers and delegates of churches. Voted, That Bro. Jonathan Bickford, Great Falls, N. H., be a member of this conference. Adjourned till half past eight o'clock Saturday morning.

Met as adjourned, the President in the chair. After prayer by Bro. G. W. Brown, the conference listened to the reports of delegates of churches. The following places were reported: Lake Village, Centre street and Bethel church, Concord; Exeter, Dover, Bradford, Whitefield, Keene, Sugar Hill, Nashua, Manchester, Sutton, Colebrook, Stewartstown, Seabrook, Farmington, Rye, Portsmouth, Salem, Swiftwater, Malvin Village, North Haverhill, Loudon Ridge, Danbury, Woodstock, East Landaff, Newport, Unity, Acworth, Great Falls, East Rochester, Rochester, Deerfield, Nottingham, Northwood Narrows, No. Chichester, Brookfield, Holderness, Meredith Center, Meredith Neck.

The Secretary being obliged to leave, Bro. C. H. Fletcher was chosen Secretary pro tem. Continued to hear reports from churches in the following localities: Sunapee, Goffstown, Porter, Me., Pittsfield, Piermont, Suncook, Hampton, Washington, Elliot, Great Works, Warren, Effingham, Kittery, Moultonboro, West Ossipee, Water Village, Sandwich, Kingston, Newcastle, Lyndenborough, Francestown, Lee, Brentwood, Peterborough, Strafford, Barrington, Hebron, Deering, and Warner.

Voted, That we recommend Sister Mary P. Lamprey, of Concord, N. H., to the churches of our conference, as a worthy christian woman, and competent to labor as a missionary and teacher among the children. The tract committee made a report which was not accepted by the conference.

It was voted that the New Hampshire tent be placed under the supervision of the protracted-meeting committee.

The following preamble and resolution was approved: Whereas, Brn. D. M. Leavitt and J. C. Shorey, servants of God, have had charge of and labored under the New Hampshire Mission tent, and whereas they have done this at the sacrifice of time and means, comforts and conveniences, therefore,

Resolved, That this conference appreciate their efforts in the Master's cause in endeavoring to get the message of the coming kingdom before the people.

Voted, That Sr. L. E. Saulpaugh be admitted to the membership of this conference.

Voted, That we return our sincere thanks to the brethren and friends in Concord, for their kindness and generous hospitalities during this annual session of our conference.

Voted, That we return our thanks to the superintendents of the various railroads, leading into Concord, for their reduction of fare. Adjourned without date.

C. H. FLETCHER, Secretary pro tem.

P. S. During this session of conference, Brn. A. H. Clark, C. R. Parsons, and Jonathan Bickford, were set apart to the solemn and responsible work of preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, by the imposition of hands and prayer, and are commended to the confidence of the people of God wherever their lot may be cast. Thus closed another good conference of the tried friends of Jesus in the old Granite State.

A. W. SIBLEY, Secretary.

TO THEE.

I bring my sins to Thee,
The sins I cannot count,
That all may cleansed be
In thy once opened fount.
I bring them, Savior, all to thee;
The burden is too great for me.

My heart to thee I bring,
The heart I cannot read,
A faithless, wandering thing,
An evil heart indeed.
I bring it, Savior, now to thee,
That fixed and faithful it may be.

To thee I bring my care,
The care I cannot flee:
Thou wilt not only share,
But take it all for me.
O loving Savior, now to thee
I bring the load that wearies me.

I bring my grief to thee,
The grief I cannot tell;
No words shall needed be,
Thou knowest all so well.
I bring the sorrow laid on me,
O suffering Savior, all to thee.

My joys to thee I bring,
The joys thy love has given,
That each may be a wing
To lift me nearer heaven.
I bring them Savior, all to thee,
Who hast procured them all for me.

My life I bring to thee,
I would not be my own;
O Savior, let me be
Thine ever, thine alone!
My heart, my life, my all I bring
To thee, my Savior and my King.

THAT REST.

"There remaineth a rest for the people of God."

There will be no aching heads and weary hearts in the kingdom of God. The rest there will be far sweeter for the toils of earth we have endured here. The value of eternal life will be enhanced by the troubles of time. Jesus is soon coming to give his weary pilgrims that rest which remaineth for the people of God. It will be blessed! A rest from sin, sorrow and suffering,—the very rest Jesus enjoys himself. We shall, if faithful, all rest with him in his glorious kingdom. How blessed it will be to hear him say—"Enter thou into thy rest!"

How many of earth's weary saints are looking forward to that heavenly rest! It will be undisturbed. When we lie down at night, we are sometimes disturbed by dreams, and start in our sleep; but no troublesome dreams or wild alarms are there. A little while and Jesus will come down the parted skies in all his pomp and splendor, with his countless holy angels, to give to all his faithful ones that eternal rest that remaineth for his dear people.

I want to be good. I mean to be good. God helping me, I will try and be good, so I may have a home in his blessed kingdom, where we shall rest forever, and be with Jesus and our dear loved ones, who now are sleeping under the clods of the valley. God grant that it may be our happy lot to enter into that rest. ANNIE R. HUNTRESS.

HEAVEN ON EARTH.

BRO GRANT:—The following is taken from the "Annual Sermon" before the American Baptist Missionary Union, Philadelphia, May 24th, 1870. By Rev. W. W. Evarts, D. D., of Chicago, Ill:

"As an old palace is refitted for a new prince of a realm, so the earth may be renovated for crown-princes of humanity. It may be restored as Eden, enlarged and beautified as the lasting abode of the regenerated race. And though endowed in the resurrection with capacity for visiting and sojourning in other worlds, still this earth may be the destined and fitting home of the immortal race. Destruction and disuse of the earth seem not accordant with the divine economy. While as the homestead of man, and consecrated by all his traditions and achievements, and the history of the fall and redemption, will it not remain the theatre of his future destiny?—the "new heavens and new earth," wherein he may dwell in perfected being, holiness and happiness forever?"

☞ A christian who is keen for work will soon find his place. If he is "apt to teach," he or she will soon gather the Sabbath-school class, and will be there, Bible in hand, every Sunday, even though the rain is spattering on the pavements. Commend me to the teacher who wears a "water-proof" and always consults conscience sooner than the barometer!—T. L. Cuyler.

GO YOURSELF.—A prominent citizen of Kalamazoo, Mich., and a judge of a Superior Court, said to a friend, "I have coaxed and whipped my boys and I can't get them to go to Sunday-school. Now what shall I do?" "Go yourself," suggested his friend. He did so. His boys and many other people followed him.

"This is for your health."—PAUL.

"KNOW THYSELF."

We have received "The Illustrated Annual of Phrenology and Physiology," published by S. R. Wells, 389 Broadway, New York. Price 25 cents. It contains interesting matter, from which we select the following:—

BREAD MAKING—HOW TO DO IT.

As bread, in many families, is the chief article of food, and with some indigent, hard-working women almost the only article, it is a matter of the first importance that the bread be of the right material and made in a proper manner.

The first necessity relative to wholesome bread is to have good, plump, well-ripened, properly-cured, and well-cleaned wheat, which is the best of all the grains for this purpose.

The grain should be dry when ground; the millstones should be sharp, so as to cut the bran pretty fine, and not merely bruise the grain, thus leaving the dark crust of the berry—the part called gluten—in large flakes. It should be ground without bolting or sifting, the entire grain possessing all the requisites for healthful food. The inventor of the mill-bolt was not a benefactor of the race. His work was a change without improvement.

As it is thought to be indispensable that bread be raised in some way to lightness or sponginess, it is an important point to learn how this lightness can be obtained without loss or injury to the bread.

FERMENTATION.—This process is the more common, and it is produced by using yeast. This, to speak plainly, is a rotting process, a decomposition of certain elements of the grain, thereby producing carbonic acid gas, and this gas in its effort to escape expands, and makes the bread puffy or light. The decomposition of the starch and sugar for the production of this gas uses up a considerable percentage of the nutritious elements of the grain, which is a dead loss to the consumer. Some bakers use flour which is made from grain that had been injured by being wet and grown in the field, or heated in the mow or stack, or heated and soured in the bin or storehouse; or of flour that has been injured and soured after being put up in barrels. The process of raising by these bakers is pushed to a great extent, that it may be very light, and the acid is then modified by the use of lime and other alkalies. Common baker's bread is sometimes almost tasteless; occasionally we meet with that which tastes sweet, rich, and natural. The aerated bread, raised by a mechanical process in air-tight receivers, has this rich, sweet, wholesome quality, and is probably the very best baker's bread that is made.

RAISED BREAD, so called, is that which is not made light by fermentation, but is raised by means of acids and alkalies instead of yeast. In this process bicarbonate of soda and muriatic acid are often used. Intrinsically, the result is the same in this method as when yeast is used—the acid combining with the soda forming common salt, and leaving the carbonic acid free to puff up the dough. In the process of fermentation to create gas to make the dough light, we lose a portion of the sugar, an important part of the nutriment of the grain. In using acids and alkalies, if they are combined in just the right proportion to neutralize each other, we have no other extraneous element formed and retained in the bread but common salt; but if this union be not complete, we have disturbing elements which must be got rid of by the system of him who eats the bread. Who has not eaten soda-biscuit heavily charged with alkali? The effects of such food can not but be very mischievous in its effects upon the health and constitution.

UNLEAVENED BREAD made light and spongy by expanded air and the conversion of water into steam is the most nutritious and healthy, and also the most economical, because none of the elements are lost in the process of fermentation, and no foreign elements are added to the original material by the process of raising, as with acids and alkalies, to make war on the health, or to tax the system in its efforts to expel them.

The lower animals find grain a complete and healthful article of food, and do not seem to need sugar, soda, acid, or the fermenting process to make their food palatable; nor do they appear to need drugs and doctors to repair gustatory damages. The lion, the horse, the ox, the pig, and the bird tribes, when left to select their food as well as their dwelling-place, and the amount and time of their exercise, are not troubled with dyspepsia, gout, or rheumatism, but enjoy themselves during their full term of life, accidents and casualties excepted.

WHEAT THE BEST BREAD STUFF. This grain is cultivated all over the world, but thrives best between the 25th and 65th parallels of latitude. It varies in its composition according to location, soil, and climate. Some varieties contain more carbonaceous elements, and are better adapted to use in cold climates, furnishing a greater amount of heat than others. Some have more nitrogenous materials, and are better adapted to give muscular power. Some have more phosphates, and therefore abundantly feed and sustain the brain, nerves, and bones. The distribution of these elements is such, however, that wheat affords better than any other grain the proper supply of all the requirements of the human system, and constitutes perhaps the best single article of food known to man, on which alone, with good water, his health and vigor might be sustained for an indefinite period.

Wheat contains more than twice as much muscle-feeding power and four times as much brain-feeding power as rice. Rice eaters are slow, sleepy, and inefficient.

If one will break a kernel of wheat, he will find a dark crust or shell covering the outside, and also the germ or chit, while the body of the grain is white, dry, and crumbly. In the process of grinding wheat for superfine flour, the outer shell, composed chiefly of gluten, being tenacious and adhesive, comes from the mill in flakes with the bran, and is sifted out, while the starch is pulverized and constitutes the fine flour. Thus the starch, which is the chief element in fine flour, is saved, which contains no food for brain and muscle; and the gluten, containing phosphates and nitrates which furnish support for brain, bone, and muscle, is cast away with the bran, and is fed to horses, cattle, and pigs. And this is the kind of flour that makes nine-tenths of the bread in American cities, besides all that is used in cakes, puddings, and pastry.

The most economical and best bread, especially in cold weather, when a hot fire is constantly kept, is what is sometimes called gems, or unleavened biscuit. For this purpose a group of cast-iron pans or cups 2½ by 3½ inches each, all made in one casting, is used. These pans are set on the top of a hot stove and allowed to become almost smoking hot when buttered for use. Then with cold water alone, and the colder the better, mix and stir quickly with a stiff spoon as much Graham or unbolted wheat-meal as will make a stiff batter or thinish mush; and when the pans are hot, fill them quickly with the thin dough and let them stand a minute on the stove before putting into a very hot oven, where they should remain twenty or twenty-five minutes, until done. If the mixture be neither too thin nor too stiff, and the pans and the oven be hot, you will have twelve as light and wholesome biscuit as any epicure could wish to eat. They may be eaten smoking warm from the oven, as they contain no poisonous chemical elements like yeast bread, which requires cooling to be rid of. They are good cold, or may be warmed in a steam-kettle. Anybody, however unskilled in cooking, can learn to make these light and nice every time. Nice, fresh wheat-meal, very cold wetting, quickly done, with a very hot place to bake them, will insure the best of "luck" always. These, like all other Graham bread, should be fresh every day.

For growing children, and those people who work or think, and especially students and sedentary persons, there is no other bread, and scarcely any other single article of food, that equals it. Let the poor who can not afford to lose fourteen per cent of the grain in the cast-off bran; let those whose bones and muscles are small, tending to rickets and spinal curvature; let invalids and dyspeptics try it, and they never will go back to superfine bread simply because it looks white and nice, and, when dry, is more pleasant to the mouth than the brown.

Oats are largely used as an article of diet in Scotland and other Northern European countries, as well as in British North America—countries where the oat is a sure crop and wheat not easily raised. It contains material for brain, bone, and muscle, and as an article of food is favorable to strength of body and to clearness and force of brain.

FAITH.

The first beams of the morning sun streamed into the wretched attic where Nettie, a little five-year-old maiden, knelt at her morning prayer. She had stolen out of bed softly, so as not to waken her invalid mother, and hungry and cold, knelt down beside her to repeat the Lord's prayer. "Give us this day our daily bread." The sacred words sounded like a mockery as they fell from the lips of a starving child, but not a shadow of doubt dimmed the wasted little face. When she had finished, she rose and looked around her; not a crumb was to be found in the cold comfortless room, and "Mamma" had told her if she asked her Father who lived up in the beautiful blue sky for bread, He would give it to her. Her heart sank for a moment, but suddenly a bright thought struck her; she must go and look for it. To hurry on the shabby little cloak was the work of a moment, and patter, patter, went the little feet down the long stairway, through the dark court and dingy alley, out into the crowded street.

It was a lovely morning; the promise of a perfect day was shining in a cloudless sky; the wind blew fresh from the sea. It brought a tinge of color to Nettie's pallid face. She had been frightened a little at the throng of strange people, at first, but God would take care of her, and she struggled bravely on. Presently her eyes fell on a baker's window, and the child's heart leaped for joy. Plenty of bread for hungry wayfarers there. Oh, how nice they looked, the crisp rolls, dainty cakes, and fresh pastry, that lay behind the crystal panes. She did not know how famished she had been. It was early yet, and the baker, a big man, with rosy face and keen grey eyes, was alone in the shop when she entered. He glanced smilingly at the little waif standing there, with the sunlight shining softly on her tangled golden hair.

"I've come for it," said she, confidently.

"Come for what?"

"My daily bread," pointing at the snowy loaves temptingly displayed on the counter.

"I'll take two, if you please, one for mamma and one for me."

"All right," said the baker, folding them up in a brown paper and handing them to his little customer, who started at once for the door.

"Stop, you little rogue," he cried, roughly, "where are your pennies?"

"I ha'n't got any," said the child simply.

"Ha'n't got any?" he repeated, impatiently. "You little baggage, what brought you here then?"

The angry words frightened the child: the poor little mouth quivered, the blue eyes filled with tears.

"Mamma's sick and Nettie's so hungry," she sobbed piteously, "and mamma said God would give us our daily bread, and so when I got up this morning I asked him for it, and then I came here."

Simple, trusting faith of childhood! No wonder that the rough baker was softened by it, and sent the little maiden back with a light heart and well filled basket to the mother's side. No wonder that to the poor sufferer "her face was as the face of an angel," and as she listened to the simple story, she murmured softly: "The God of the fatherless answereth prayer. I should have called you Faith, my child."

"CAST A LINE FOR YOURSELF."

A boy stood watching some anglers on a bridge. He was poor and dejected. At last, approaching a basket well-filled with wholesome-looking fish, he thought, "If now I had these, I should be happy. I could sell them at a fair price, and buy me food and lodgings."

"I will give you just as many, and just as good fish," said the owner, who chanced to overhear his words, "if you will do me a trifling favor."

"And what is that?" asked the other, eagerly.

"Only to watch this line till I come back. I wish to go on a short errand."

The proposal was gladly accepted. The old fisherman was gone so long that the boy began to be impatient. Meanwhile, however, the hungry fish snapped greedily at the baited hook, and the boy lost his depression in the excitement of pulling them in; and when the owner of the line returned, he had caught a large number. Counting out from them as many as were in the basket, and presenting them to the boy, the old fisherman said, "I fulfil my promise with the fish you have caught, to teach you, whenever you see others learning what you need, to waste no time in fruitless wishing, but to 'cast a line for yourself.'"

THE VOICE OF JESUS.

Hark! 'tis the voice of Jesus
Calling to thee.
Weary and burdened one,
"Come unto Me";
For thee thy blood was spilt,
To take away thy guilt;
I'll cleanse thee if thou wilt,
But come to Me.

Hark! 'tis the voice of Jesus
Calling to thee.
Child of my love, lean hard,
But lean on Me.
I'll cheer thee in distress,
When cares around thee press
In this lone wilderness;
Then lean on Me.

Hark! 'tis the voice of Jesus
Calling to thee.
Fix all thy faith and hope
Solely in Me.
Thine every step I'll trace,
And guide thee by my grace,
Till thou behold my face;
Then rest in Me.

Hark! 'tis the voice of Jesus
Calling to thee;
Speak for me while thou may'st;
Be bold for me.
The world may mock and sneer,
But thou need'st never fear,
For I am always near,
So speak for Me.

Hark! tis the voice of Jesus
Calling to thee.
I'm coming soon to earth,
So watch for Me.
The night is long and drear,
But morning shades appear,
Which speak my advent near,
Then watch for Me.

Hark! 'tis the voice of Jesus
Calling to thee.
I "come again" that thou
May'st come to Me.
And when I "come again,"
Thou shalt be freed from pain,
And in thy kingdom reign
For aye with Me.

For the World's Crisis.

THE 6000 YEARS.

For the first time I have now been considering this subject, and with the deepest interest. Both in the ancient church and in the Christian, it has engaged the attention of great numbers, and in both the belief has prevailed, to a great extent, that in just six thousand years from the creation, or fall, God would terminate his dispensations of grace and mercy given to man for his recovery, by the introduction of the unchangeable and immortal state. Though it must be admitted that there is no direct proof from the Scriptures that this is his purpose, yet the inference has seemed so clear and undoubted as to have produced a very general conviction.

The faith of some of the early fathers, together with their reasons, is well known and need not be given here. The reformers, it appears, were of the same opinion, and Luther quotes the saying of Rabbi Elias, that six thousand years were to pass before the resurrection and renewal of the earth, two thousand before the law, two thousand under the law, and two thousand under the Messiah. and proceeds to compute the time of the second advent by their proximity to the close of the last period.

Mede says: "The divine institution of the sabbatical year among the Jews, has a plain, typical reference to the seventh millenary, according to the well-known tradition among the Jewish doctors, adopted by many in every age of the Christian church, that this world will attain to its limit at the end of six thousand years." A writer in a Journal of Prophecy says: "It is so very ancient and general a tradition in the church, having been maintained by the Jews anterior to Christ's advent, by the Christians of the first centuries, and by the most judicious of our reformers, that we cannot help regarding it ourselves with feelings of great interest." And until within a century it seems to have been the most prominent waymark that the church had.

But whatever weight there may be in the reasons offered in support of these expectations, it seems clear that a period of just this length from the creation we shall very soon reach. And doubtless there are now tens of thousands in the church who, if they were fully convinced that this period of time would soon terminate, would be more profoundly impressed than with the termination of even the 2300 years of Daniel's prophecy. But how is this known? How can it be ascertained that we are now living almost six thousand years from the creation? Why, by the Bible—this wonderful book that God has given us for our guide, and which those who carefully search it find that it contains more information than superficial readers are apt to suppose. In connection with the events and occurrences which it relates, it is surprisingly faithful in giving the time that measures them. But is it possible that the ages of patriarchs, the reign of kings, the time of judges, the rests, the servitudes, and captivities, have any connection or relation the one to the other, so that they can be counted or accurately reckoned? Certainly; and I am amazed at the simplicity with which it is done; and I affirm that in all the books of the world, there is not a record of any considerable extent that is so simple, so intelligible, so straightforward, as the one we have here.

Hitherto I have had but little faith that the age of the world could be learned with any degree of certainty, but by a little study doubts have been removed, and what I have thought and spoken of as the belief of others, is now my own.

I know it may be thought that, as all the periods of time given for the reign of kings, judges, etc., are given in full years, it is probable that, as there would be a fraction of a year over or less in most every case, when summed up considerable time would be gained or lost, as the case might be. But why so? Might not the fraction over in one case correspond with the fraction less in the other, so that the correct time be obtained by adding the full years as given? We should rather conclude that since God caused the record to be kept, it would be correctly kept; for if it was the design that it should ever be of use to the church, how could it be unless it was so kept?

But we have inspired authority for adding together the years as given in Bible history, in order to learn the exact measure of a long period; for instance, the apostle Paul, in giving some facts of Scripture history, says: 'And after that he gave judges about the space of four hundred and fifty years until Samuel the prophet." Now we are not to suppose that he knew this by direct revelation; if he did, so much the better; but rather that he searched the Old Testament, and there learned the fact by counting the time given for the different judges with the intervals. And we have the same means of ascertaining the fact; and if there is any doubt of the correctness of Paul's arithmetic, we have only to add the years as given of the different judges, together with the intervals in which the Lord "sold them" or "delivered them" into the hands of their enemies for their sins, from the first servitude until the ministrations of Samuel,—and the result is just four hundred and fifty years. And as the time is given in each case, as in most all others in Bible history, in complete years, without fractions, it seems evident that it is a safe method of computing the whole time of the duration of the old dispensation;—in fact, the correctness of this method as applied to a considerable portion of its duration is allowed by the whole christian world.

From the fact that in the Bible the ancient records are so faithfully and minutely kept, it follows that we are able to give chapter and verse that contain the time in fragments that, when aggregated or added, covers the whole space from the creation to the first advent (and since then nobody doubts in regard to time), with these exceptions: we are informed that after the death of Moses, Joshua led Israel for a period, and it would seem for a considerable period; that after his death they were for a while without a leader; and that Samuel, after Eli, and before the kings' rule, judged Israel; but the time in these cases is not given. But without doubt a record of the years was carefully kept in the Jewish church, as was everything of the kind; and the reliable Jewish historian, Josephus, informs us that the time of Joshua was twenty-five years, the interval or anarchy eighteen years, and of Samuel twelve years; so that we have good authority (no mortal can offer a reason why we should not receive it) for believing, even without the aid of the Jubilee cycles, that this is just the duration of time not given by inspired writers, and that by summing up all, we find (see table in "Adventism" by our Cor. Ed.) that our A. D. was in the year of the world 4126. To this it would require 1875 years to be added, diminished by one, or to 4125 years and a part before A. D., 1874 years and a part since A. D., to make 6000 years.

That the 2300 years that reach to the cleansing of the sanctuary end in 1875, is evident beyond all contradiction. That there is such strength of evidence, nearly all of which is inspired, and what is not is indisputable, that the 6000 years, "the period allotted for the duration of the earth under the curse," ends in the same year, certainly looks significant. And I am sure that if this were conceived by the American and foreign churches, especially as Jesus will previously appear to receive his people, they would be embarrassed and dispirited while following the programme for the week of prayer, suggested by the Evangelical Alliance, on the last day, Jan. 7, in praying for one of the objects, the conversion of the world; while they would be invigorated and inspirited in praying for the other object—"The glorious appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ." PATIENCE.

Much depends upon the exercise of this one virtue. We may be in possession of nearly all of the other christian graces, and yet if this one be wanting, we fail to possess our souls. The ways of God are sometimes very mysterious, and past finding out. We wonder that God should be so severe with his children, and begin to find fault and blame him who is far above us in wisdom love and power. In short, we lose our patience, and forget to "stand still and see the salvation of God." At our homes we sometimes forget to exercise all loving kindness to those who are our kindred, thus making ourselves unpleasant and losing our home influence. A cheerful tone of voice and pleasant persuasive words are far more powerful than the loud commanding tone of the impatient speaker. Moses was a very meek man, but he lost his self-control, and God manifested his displeasure.

How often we speak quick, hasty words, that in a short time we would give worlds, if in our possession, to recall. How many bleeding hearts have been torn afresh until they have given up to the influence and become hard and unmanageable. We sometimes look upon the church and see pride and formality or a wrong spirit creeping in, and in our haste to see all become right, we forget to commit it into the hands of God, and thus lose the grace out of our own hearts. A great deal of patience is lost by feeling that myself or church is the standard; and thus becoming bigoted, we have no patience with those who do not think as we do, and discard them as willful sinners. We should earnestly plead with God for those who seem to be wrong, but our prayers should always end with "Thy will be done." We should not always yield to our adversaries. Forbearance occasionally ceases to be a virtue; but in such cases we should reprove and rebuke with all long-suffering and doctrine. Our Savior is a good and great example; and knowing that he was tempted in all points as we are, we can with safety copy his example and never copy a blot.—Earnest Christian.

SANCTIFICATION.

"But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption."—1 Cor. 1: 30.

There are mentioned in this verse four steps from sin to glory.

1. Wisdom. "The fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; and to depart from evil is understanding."—Job 28: 28. The first step is choice. "Length of days is in her right hand; and in her left hand riches and honor. Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace."—Prov. 3: 13-18. And many a man and woman, who have corrupted and enervated body and mind by disobeying God, will acknowledge that in fearing the Lord, and departing from evil, is length of days, riches and honor.

2. Righteousness. But if a man departs from evil he is not free from sin. We can soil a white garment until we are ashamed to wear it, and make up our mind to keep out of the dirt and soil it no more; but that does not make it clean. If we protect it ever so carefully from the falling dust, and keep it from contact with what defiles it, it is just as dirty as ever. And so the sinner, though he may sin no more, is just as filthy as ever until he is cleansed from sin.

No man can cleanse himself and be pleasing in the sight of a sin-abhorring God. His best deeds are full of selfishness, pride, emulation, and like secret faults. How can he make amends for outward sin and inward corruption? How can he cover his filth with the dirty, tattered garments he only can make? "Our righteousness is as filthy rags." But when a man deliberately and determinedly chooses to serve the Lord, the Lord will pardon sin and impart his strength. There is a garment whole, and clean, and warm—the righteousness of Christ; and with this he may be clothed and stand before God complete, justified, righteous.

Then he is to keep with all diligence his heart, from which the scarlet sins have been effaced. It is white as snow; he must keep it so.

Righteousness means, first, justification; second, exact rectitude. The first is our relation to God. The other our relation to our fellow beings. The righteous man is not only righteous through Jesus' atonement, but righteous in worldly business or pleasure. Not only pure in heart, but pure in daily life. He believes in God's mercy to undeserving man, to him in particular, and tries to imitate it by being merciful to others who need mercy without deserving it. He is willing to pay what a thing is worth, and wants no more. He will return borrowed articles—books and umbrellas for instance, in good time and good condition. He will measure corn or cloth correctly, if the buyer's back is towards him; and when he sells a horse, tells its bad as well as its good qualities.

3. Sanctification. Sanctification is simply a separation from common to holy purposes. The vessels, and altar, and candlesticks, which were used in the service of God by the Jews anciently, were sanctified. The people did not take them to eat and drink with, or to sit upon, or cook with, or to work by, when convenience called for them, and at the hour of worship carry them to the temple. They were in the temple all the time, and when God wanted them used, in worshiping or serving him, they were ready. And when the child of God is sanctified, he is set apart for God only to use.

The devil cannot play with him. If Satan wants to get some one to rehearse nonsense, or peddle scandal, or suggest fancies or speculative theories, and so weaken or divide and distract, or bewilder and scatter the flock, he must employ some one that is unsanctified. Man cannot use him. If selfish, godless men want to abase or exalt anybody, or advance schemes, or get money, or influence, or popularity, they select their agents and runners from another class. Self does not control him. Taste, and inclination, and affinity, and ambition, are subjected to the Highest. "The lust of the eye, the lust of the flesh, and the pride of life" are mortified. God worketh in him both to will and to do of his good pleasure; and the world, the flesh, and the devil, though they may flatter, and crave, and flaunt before his eyes all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them, cannot persuade or hire him to do their pleasure. He is sanctified through the truth. God's word is truth, and its teachings outweigh all else.

When God has done all he can for us, accepted, forgiven, adopted, strengthened, and helped, he requires something in return. After salvation comes religion. After righteousness is sanctification. "This is the will of God, even your sanctification." 1 Thess. 4: 3. When any one gives himself to the Lord, the Spirit beareth witness with his spirit that he is a child of God. "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God."—Rom. 8: 14. Sometimes, then, he is overwhelmned with joy, and shouts, or otherwise manifests the blessing; and others, seeing the fruit of the Spirit's joy, long for similar ecstasy, and fast and pray for it, but many never get it.

Jesus promised that when he sent the Holy Spirit from heaven to earth, it should reprove the world of sin, of righteousness, and of a judgment to come. That is the first work of the Spirit, and he that will be led by the Spirit will next be shown what the Lord would have him do; and if he follows the Spirit, its fruits will be produced. Faith is one, and he will have faith unto salvation. "By grace are ye saved, through faith, and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God." Eph. 2: 8. God gives it by giving his Spirit to produce it. And whoever wants love, joy, peace, long-suffering, and other indispensable graces, has only to do as the Lord by his Spirit and word directs. The "Spirit and the word agree."

Turn to the fifty-eighth of Isaiah, and you will read of a people that tried to get the Lord and failed; who sorrowed and fasted to make their voice heard on high, but the Lord took no knowledge. He told them what to do, and promised, if they followed his directions, their light should "break forth as the morning"—the morning light creeps on with gradual loveliness—and their health should spring forth speedily.

There are many panting after sanctification, and selfishly longing for God to pour his blessings into their hearts, which are already so full of carnality that there is no space for God to fill. To such the Lord would say: "Deal thy bread to the hungry," and "bring the poor that are cast out to thy house"—not send them to the poor-house; "when thou seest the naked, . . . cover him," and do not be ashamed to own your poor or degraded relation; "take away from the midst of thee the yoke, the putting forth of the finger,"—shaming and pointing out the faults of other sinners—"and speaking vanity"; "draw out thy soul [or life] to the hungry," that is, give to the needy, even if it take a little from your life's pleasure or ease; "and satisfy the afflicted soul";—in short, live for God and sinful, suffering humanity; "then shall thy darkness be as the noonday, and the Lord shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in drought, and make fat thy bones; and thou shalt be as a watered garden,"—a watered garden is fruitful—"and as a spring of water whose waters fail not." Such an one would not be affected seriously by spiritual drought around him, or the revival showers. Please read the chapter.

The one who gives himself to God may not be instantly transported from midnight darkness to noonday glory. There is no promise of it. In the morning the dark shadows slowly fade away, and almost imperceptibly the sky lightens; we see objects dimly, then more clearly, then distinctly, and gradually the gloom and chilliness give way to warmth and brightness, till the sun is in the zenith flooding the world with glory, and darkness seems impossible. So the sanctified soul, though there may be in his experience no startling change, will lose condemnation and despondency and doubts, and freedom and confidence and faith and rest will increase as he is led by the Spirit; and the approving smile of God is upon him, until "hope shall change to glad fruition, faith to sight, and prayer to praise," when Jesus brings redemption. GOOD TIDINGS.

"And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people."—Luke 2: 10.

Sin in all its forms, followed by countless evil consequences, had for thousands of years been pressing as with a mountain weight upon the children of our fallen race, and the whole creation had been groaning for deliverance. The end of all the ways which had been followed by men was death. None could keep alive his own soul. All had sinned, and some at least had learned that "the soul that sinneth, it shall die."

A promise had been made and repeated many times, that a Redeemer should come, a glorious and mighty prince, who should be the heir to the kingdom and throne of David, and reign over the house of Israel forever, and of his kingdom there should be no end.

This glorious prince, who was to be the Messiah, the Anointed One, was to bring salvation, or in other words, to "save his people from their sins." He would save them from sin and deliver them from death, which was the result of sin. No other event could be of sufficient importance to compare with this. This was the good news, the glad tidings, which should be proclaimed to every nation, "good tidings of great joy." Almost every page of the Old Testament had a type or shadow of the Coming One. Abel was a type by his life of righteouness, his accepted sacrifice, and by the manner of his death. Enoch was, like Abel, a type of Christ, with something more than was shown by Abel, that is, the ascension, or removal from the earth bodily.

Noah was also a type, by providing a way of escape from the deluge, which was to destroy all that would not listen to his preaching and enter the ark prepared by him. Joseph was one of the most complete types, being hated, rejected and expelled by his brethren, and yet becoming the savior of them all according to the record in the book of Genesis. Joshua was a prominent type of Christ, by leading the chosen people into the promised land, and subduing all their enemies. Sampson, by his boundless strength foreshadowed the power of Him who was the strong deliverer, mighty to save.

David, as the conqueror of the champion of the hosts of the enemy, and by his exaltation and reign upon the throne, was also a type of Christ. Solomon, as the son of David, and as builder of the temple; also by the wonderful extension of his kingdom, and by his great wisdom, was a very eminent type of the glory that shall follow the second coming of Christ. But time and space would fail to mention all the types to be found in the law and in the prophets. The "lamb without blemish," the "high priest," the king, the prophet, and many other well known types, each in their way indicated, illustrated and foreshadowed the coming and character, the sufferings, death, and final exaltation of the Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

Reader, have you a personal interest in Christ? If not, then of what avail to you is this proclamation of glad tidings? There is now set before you a way of escape from sin and death, but if you will not walk in that way, then how can you hope to be benefitted by the offer of life and pardon? Do you believe the record which God has given of his Son? Some who hear, but do not obey, are likened to a man who built a house without a foundation, which fell when the storm beat against it. You must not only hear and believe, but also obey. We must be followers of Christ, and walk as he walked, if we would be saved. How can any one hope for salvation while living in sin, and fulfilling the desires of the carnal mind; yielding themselves servants and slaves to lust and envy, and every base passion?

We must deny all ungodliness and worldly lust and put off the old man with his deeds, and put on the new man, which is created in righteousness and true holiness. Lord, help us to crucify the flesh with its affections and lusts, that we may be saved with an everlasting salvation. F. H. Chamberlain.

WHY WALK IN DARKNESS?

Why walk in darkness? Has the clear light vanished,
That gave us joy and day?
Has the great Sun departed? Has sin banished
His life-begetting ray?

Light of the world! forever, ever shining,
There is no change in thee;
True light of life, all joy and health enshrining,
Thou canst not fade nor flee!

Thou hast arisen, but thou descendest never,
To-day shines as the past;
All that thou wast, thou art, and shalt be ever—
Brightness from first to last.

Night visits not thy sky, nor storm, nor sadness;
Day fills up all its blue;
Unfailing beauty and unfaltering gladness,
And love, forever new.

Why walk in darkness? Our true light still shineth;
It is not night, but day.
All healing and all peace his light enshrineth;
Why shun his loving ray?

Are night and shadows better, truer, dearer,
Than day, and joy, and love?
Do tremblings and mistrustings bring us nearer
To the great God of love?

Light of the world! undimming and unsetting,
Oh! shine each mist away;
Banish the fear, the falsehood, and the fretting,
By an unchanging day! H. Bonar.

DEBT.

While we can praise christians of our acquaintance for their freedom from the sin of trafficing in intoxicating spirits, we feel sorry to say that the demoralization among them on the subject of going in debt, and a disregard of the obligations of right and duty in such cases is most fearful. Brethren in debt, brethren unable to pay the dues they owe their fellow man, have no conscience in spending on foolish luxuries and in vain show and display, for themselves and their families, sums of money sufficient to relieve many of their pressed and needy creditors.

Whenever I have received another's money or possessions, with a promise to return or pay it, whatever of money I may possess until it is paid is rightfully his, not mine. When I spend that money without his consent, I spend his money, not mine. The fact that I have it in my possession does not alter at all the morality of the case from what it would be were it in his possession, and I were to take his money against his will and spend it for my own or my family's benefit.

There is just as much moral dishonor and dishonesty in withholding from a man what is his, as in taking it from him in the first place. If I borrow his wagon or his horse to use a day, and then withhold it a week or a month against his wishes, I commit as great a moral crime as if I had taken it in the first place against his will. When I borrow money, or purchase property to be paid for at a certain time, and I withhold the pay for the purpose of using the money or the value of the money, my act is of the same moral turpitude as though I had forcibly taken possession of my creditor's money in the first place, against his will. When I am in debt, then, and use the money rightly belonging to another to trade or to speculate on, to spend on myself or my family, I act morally just as though I took forcible possession of my creditor's money to supply my own family or myself with the luxuries and comforts of life.

Brethren, our consciences, our morals need educating to a higher and purer standard of right on these subjects. The christian religion calls for it, and because we do not practice a purer morality and higher standard of honesty, the christian religion is reproached and our fellow men are driven from the church of God. . . . . A christian with a cultivated, tender conscience, with a nice sense of christian honor and integrity, will not retain the money or property of another for his own benefit. He will not spend in luxuries for himself or family what is justly another's.

Brethren, let us cultivate tender consciences, a nice, true, christian sense of integrity, and act up to it. The religion of Christ will not then suffer reproach in our lives, and our fellow men will be attracted by the beauty of holiness within the pale of God's redeeming mercy, that they may enjoy the blessing of salvation.—Gospel Advocate.

A GEM FROM JOHN.

Among his sparkling words of truth and grace, the large-hearted, Christ-like John has this: "We love him, because he first loved us." Love for love! Beautiful thought! That is John's motto, his text, his theology, his every-day conscious christian life. Love for love—how natural it is, how simple it seems, and yet it is at once supernatural and wondrously sublime. It is not a creed, something believed; or a doctrine, something taught; but a life-power, a constraining motive, a joy unspeakable, heaven in essence, glory in foretaste, and it is cause and consequence in happy and beautiful harmony.

I. "We love him"—a fact. Consciousness speaks. The Christian man knows that he loves. It is not a wish, a hope, or a declaration that such a state of heart is desirable, and every way in harmony with union to Christ the great lover; but it is the positive utterance of an indisputable fact of which the speaker is personally certain. It is a very blessed fact that the purest and best emotions of the child of God are matters of subjective consciousness of which no logical process can deprive him, and which remain as the consolation of his heart even when the Christian path is very rough, and Christian brethren not very brotherly. And it is only the child of God, the man born from above, the partaker of the divine nature, who can say this. The man who is only born of the flesh, however correct his deportment, and orthodox his creed, and respectable his church, cannot say it. "We love him" is the family word which can be truthfully uttered only by the children. It is the children's test. "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." The "him" is obvious as a truth, for the child of God loves his Father; but what would be the consequence of dropping the pronoun from 1 John 4: 19, and reading it, "We love, because he first loved us"? It would be to give the comprehensive thought of love to the Father and all his family, the Son and all his followers, the Holy Spirit and all of whom he has quickened. And the very next words suggest that this was the broadly blessed fact before the apostle's mind, for he writes, "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar.' But are we at liberty to drop the pronoun? The best Greek critics are agreed that the original text did not contain it. So we have the grand distinguishing characteristic of God's family—love. They are the men who can say—"we love."

II. It is the consequence of another fact. "We love," there is a consequence; "because he first loved us;" there is its cause. The cause is adequate to produce this result, notwithstanding the fact that the human heart is enmity against God. Priority in time is affirmed of it; "he first loved us." Here is a lesson in theology: in everything that is good, God first, man afterwards. We originate nothing that will live in a holy eternity. All that we are and do as natural men must perish; all that God does in us, for us, and through us, as subjects of the new creation in Christ, will live. The results of the Divine lover's love will continue. But the priority in time, whether it was the hour before the world was, is only in harmony with the superior strength of the love which produced ours. Why, what shall we say about the love of God?

He loved us!
He loved us!
He loved us!
He first loved us!

Put it how you will, ring the changes as you may, the effect is altogether wonderful. But we had better hold back from the overwhelming contemplation, so far as pen and ink are concerned, that each of us may take it to his closet and think over it there. There are some things in the Christian's treasury too sacred for either press or pulpit. But, O happy, happy one, who can say with the beloved disciple:—"I love, because he first loved me;" and, "I know that when He shall appear I shall be like him!"—Rainbow.

HINTS TO PREACHERS.

Brethren:—Do you want to make your ministry a success, to gain respect in your profession, to win souls to Christ, and to honor God in your high calling? Then consider the following hints.

Do not trade horses. You will "get your eye-teeth cut," or you will trade your soul and your church away to the devil.

Do not think yourself above work, and beware that you do not fall below it.

Let patent-rights alone; and do not solicit your people to buy patent-medicines and receipts till you forget all about your church periodicals and hymn-books.

Use tobacco only to brighten your intellect, to sweeten your temper, to cleanse your mouth, to adapt you to the best society, and to replenish the Lord's missionary treasury.

Be a gentleman in all of your conduct, out of and in the pulpit.

Make your style that of a man of God; and avoid all affectation.

Be a common man in respectable society, altogether above the vulgar in style and life, but never aspire to aristocracy. Express your thanks for the smallest favors. Never give people cause to think you ungrateful, even for your hard-earned salary. Teach liberality be your own example. Remember that "a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches." Be careful about making promises. Keep your word in all cases. Rather sacrifice a horse than your reputation. Better surprise men with a timely apology than with a broken promise.

Where you do not mean yes say no. But never say no when duty says yes. Be careful with your words in the smallest matters. Have no trifles. Many a good sermon has been altogether buried under one unbecoming word.

Be cheerful, but not clownish. Be polite, but not foppish. Be dignified, but "not puffed up." Be sociable, communicative, but not simply talkative. Do not slight the children. Do not insult even the impudent. Keep your secrets. Be reticent where people's faults are discussed. Speak of people's good qualities freely but prudently; and of their faults with great caution and charity, and expose none where duty does not demand it. With all your own grievances go first to the Lord, then to the offender—and stop there.

Be industrious, but never in a hurry. One hour late in the morning always makes the day that much too short. Be prompt in meeting your promises, and making your time. Never teach people lying and laziness by being late at your own appointments.

Avoid long prayers, except in secret. Make all your sermons from thirty to forty-five minutes long; and make one hour your average length for an entire service. Use plain English in all your sermons. Big words used to display scholarship only prove the want of it. The most learned men always use the simplest language. Many preachers would be ashamed of their words if they knew their full meaning.

Study your Bible, and take your skeletons from Isaiah, and John, and Paul, and Christ. Use not the gospel to help you preach science; but use science to help you preach the gospel.

Read Christian biography, but avoid "religious novels." Study well your sermons. Write them, if possible, but leave them in your drawer when you go to your pulpit. You can not look at your congregation through a paper wall; and, it is ill manners to look at another object while earnestly addressing your fellow. Remember that wit is not wisdom; and sarcasm is poor logic. Many preachers display their dullness in their sharp (?) sayings; and their want of religion in their graceless style; and their want of knowledge in their indiscreet zeal.

Preach not yourself,—nor anybody else,—but Christ. In your preaching tell people their faults, but all in a kind and sympathetic spirit, carefully guarding against the harsh and censorious style. Remember that Heaven expects you to be your people's "beloved pastor;" and that, if they can not desire your continuance with them at the close of the year, it is doubtful whether you are fit for another pastoral work.

Some pastors gather, and feed, and discipline their flocks, while others scatter, and starve, and demoralize theirs. The Lord make you one of the former, and spare you from ever being preceded or succeeded by one of the latter.

Eat only to live, and do not forget that he who lives to eat is a fool. He that denounces intemperance must not be a glutton. Most of our afflictions, and especially those that worst unfit us for religious duties, are the results of our carnal indulgences. . . . Beware how you eat.

If you have no family cares, then be content, and thank God that you can labor as Paul did—"do better."

If the Lord in his providence has seen proper to bereave you of a beloved companion, then, in humble submission, bow down in your grief, and say, "Thy will be done." But, remember her; and—do not seek for another wife before her corpse is cold in the grave. Think, for a moment, how many brethren have made themselves odious to the church and destroyed their good influence, their usefulness, and themselves, by such indiscretions.

Do not marry a wife till you can find, not the girl of sweet sixteen, but the woman who will be a "helpmeet for you" in your calling. Help her. Take her with you, where she can adapt herself to the work of a Mary, a Lydia, a Dorcas, in the church. Make her comfortable at home. Keep your children together—and at home. Once a good sister, seeing her pastor and his family come, was tempted to remark, "There are the gypsies again." The Lord pardon her.

Is it not strange that the best (?) man in the place should have the worst children? Think, brother. Finally, remember this: that a minister of Jesus "must be" "one that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity; for if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God?" "Moreover, he must have a good report of them that are without; lest he fall into reproach and the snare of the devil." Brother, let us pray.—Religious Telescope.

☞ Giving conscientiously and from a desire to honor God does not impoverish the giver. "Give and it shall be given unto you again"—even "an hundred-fold," of both property and friends. (Mark 10: 30.) He who has all resources at his disposal will bestow upon every faithful steward all the abundance of earthly good which that steward can wisely use. It was in reference to worldly prosperity that God said to his people: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in my house, and prove me now herewith, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Such is the divine bounty, that man gives his tithe, and God fills both home and heart with good. The morning flower gives up its dew-drop; the heavens return the evening shower. Nor falls that shower upon the giver only; the bursting clouds pour blessings far and wide.—Christian Secretary.

The World's Crisis
AND
SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.
Boston, Wednesday, Oct. 21, 1870.

Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the Business Agent, Geo. T. Adams.

LIBERAL OFFERS.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

We are anxious to have our paper reach several thousand new readers the coming year, and become a blessing to them. It is the best means we have of sowing the seed of the gospel of the kingdom in some hearts, and we should all awake, and do whatever we can to have its warnings of the coming judgment reach as many new readers as possible.

Some of our preachers have done nobly, and others would gladly help on the good cause, if they could receive aid for their families while they spend their time for the paper. For the benefit of such, the A. C. P. Society, at a recent meeting, by vote authorised the Agent to pay ten per cent to preachers on all collections for the Crisis and Young Pilgrim; and it is hoped they will take hold of the work in earnest, and have great success. Those who understand the expense of publishing a paper, know that it would cost no more to set up the type for twelve or fifteen thousand copies, than it does for a less number; hence, after our regular issue of about nine thousand copies is run off, we could print several thousand more at the cost only of press work and paper. It has, therefore, been concluded by the Editorial Committee and Business Agent, to whom the Society referred this subject, to make the following liberal offers to new subscribers, to induce them to form clubs, and thus make success easy to all who put forth efforts to obtain new subscribers

TRIAL OFFER.

We will send the World's Crisis three months on trial, to new subscribers, for fifty cents. We ask our friends to obtain yearly subscriptions, if possible; but where subscribers can be obtained for only three months, please visit them again, and, if possible, get them to renew before their paper is stopped at the end of three months.

To aid in obtaining new subscribers for 1871, we make the following offer of nearly

Three Months Free.

We will send the Crisis—for the balance of this year, from the time the name is received—free to all new subscribers for 1871, sent in before Jan. 1st.—Rate $2.50.

Now is the time to subscribe, and put forth energetic efforts to obtain new subscribers.

CLUBBING WITH OTHER PAPERS.

As many persons take several papers, and could be induced to take the Crisis, if they could get two papers at club rates, we have accepted offers to club other papers with the Crisis, which will enable our friends to obtain subscribers where it would otherwise be impossible to introduce our paper.

If any of our regular subscribers wish any of the papers on the list at club rates, they can get new subscribers for the Crisis, as it is not necessary that both papers should be sent to the same address.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS THREE OR SIX MONTHS FREE.

We will send the World's Crisis six months, and the Phrenological Journal and Packard's Monthly (price $3.00) one year for $3.00; or the World's Crisis three months, with the Rural New Yorker (price $3.00) one year for $3.00; or, three months with the New York Weekly Tribune (price $2.00) one year for $2.00; or three months with the Bee-Keeper's Journal and National Agriculturist (price $1.00) one year for $1.00.

CLUBBING.

We will send any one of the following periodicals with the World's Crisis, each one year, as follows:—

The Bee-Keeper's Journal and National Agriculturist ($1.00) and the World's Crisis both for	$3.00
The Laws of Life and World's Crisis for	$3.25

ARE WE READY?

Every one who expects or desires to be at "the marriage supper of the Lamb" should inquire, Am I ready? Only "the pure in heart" have any promise of being accepted. Jesus sent "his angels" to tell John to write and say to the churches that "there shall in no wise enter into it [the new Jerusalem] any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life." Rev. 21: 27. This scripture teaches us that those who indulge in things that defile, have not their names "written in the Lamb's book of life." Those who are ready when Jesus comes, must be pure, and free from all defiling things. Are we ready? The evidence is very strong to show that Jesus is coming soon. Let us all be ready. "They that were ready went in with him to the marriage; and the door was shut." Matt. 25: 10. On which side of the door would the reader be found, if the Lord should come this day to gather his saints? Some will be shut in with the Lord, and others will be shut out, and never enter. It is a solemn hour in which we are living. Eternal life will soon be gained or forever lost.

CHICAGO.

Monday morning, Dec. 12th. We had a good day in the Lord with the church in this city yesterday. It was quite a stormy day, but many faced it, and gathered to worship the God of our fathers. We could truly say it was good to be there. The peace of God rested upon the dear saints, and tears of joy were seen in the eyes of the warm friends of Jesus. We had a feast from the Lord. The cloud of mercy hangs over this church. There are noble souls connected with it, who stand ready to follow the Lord wheresoever he may lead. They have given all for Christ. Their hope is bright; their peace is like a river; and their hearts are filled with abounding joy.

In a former notice of the Chicago meetings, we spoke of Bro. Manning, who was for many years a very successful revival preacher among the Methodists; but for the last fifteen years had been in a backslidden state. During the time, he has been successfully engaged in the medical profession. During the late meetings in Chicago, he returned to Jesus, and is now strong in the Lord. He has had a rich experience in Christianity, and knows how to go to work in revival meetings. He has preached some for the church in Chicago to good acceptance; and has consented that we may say to our readers that he will lay aside his medical profession sufficiently to go out and hold protracted meetings, where the door may open. His address is E. T. Manning, 274 Blue Island Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

We had a pleasant interview with Bro. C. C. Ramsey, who is strong in the Lord, and proclaiming the glad tidings that Jesus is soon coming. He intends to spend most of the winter in Iowa. Sr. Ramsey's health is still quite poor. Pray for Bro. and Sr. Ramsey; and wherever he goes, we hope the Brn. will remember that a long sickness brings a large addition to the family expenses. Help Bro. R. carry his heavy burden.

We found Bro. O. Bendixon, the Norwegian, was preaching to the Norwegian people in Chicago, and that a new interest is being awakened among them in relation to the coming of Christ, and other great truths in the Scriptures.

To-day (Dec. 12th) we purpose to leave Chicago en route for San Francisco, where we hope to arrive in season to preach next Sabbath. Again we would say, pray for us, that the blessing of God may rest upon our labors in California. We are fully satisfied that we are in the path of duty as pointed out by the Lord. He gives constant peace, like a deep, flowing stream. Praise his holy name. All is well.

ABSENT FROM THE BODY.

"Therefore we are always confident, knowing that whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord; for we walk by faith, not by sight. We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord." 2 Cor. 5: 6-8.

In the preceding verses, the apostle had been using figures of speech in relation to this life and the next. It should be observed that Paul uses the plural pronoun we, while the word body is singular. If he meant by "body" the physical organism, we think he would have said, We are willing to be absent from our bodies, instead of "the body." We will let the apostle explain his own terms; "So we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another."—Rom. 12: 5. "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular."—1 Cor. 12: 27. "And he is the head of the body, the church." Col. 1: 18. Examples like these might be multiplied to show that the apostle often speaks of "the body," meaning "the church"; from which he was "willing rather to be absent, . . . and to be present with the Lord"; but does not intimate that he expected to go to heaven at death, or to receive his reward before the personal coming of Christ to raise the dead, when he will give immortality to the faithful.

THE FRENCH EMPIRE.

It is becoming a question of much interest in political circles, whether Napoleon will return to the throne of France at the close of the war. The conviction is increasing that he will be reinstated. The special correspondent to the New York Herald writes as follows:

"From what I see and hear I get convinced more and more of the impending re-establishment of the Empire in France, if the French do not succeed in forming a legal Republican Government before the fall of Paris. It is of course impossible to communicate to others what are mainly personal impressions; but there are also considerations of a general and public character that ought not to escape the attention of the European public. Just let the reader put to himself this question—What are the Germans to do with their prisoners if the war be protracted beyond the fall of Paris? They cannot keep and feed them in all eternity. And if they, sooner or later, must send them back to France, the resistance of the French at the same time continuing, can they do it in any other way, but on condition that these prisoners themselves are made use of to break the resistance? But, then, this must be made sure of beforehand, by the prisoners being reorganized into a regular and disciplined army, acting in the name of a Government—a French Government—which has made its peace with Germany. What other Government is to be had for this purpose as an exclusively military one composed of Louis Napoleon and his marshals?"

WRITE.

We think much good might be accomplished if the preaching Brn. would write more for "our paper." The Brn. and Srs. are anxious to hear from them. A few words of comfort would be very acceptable. Come, take up the pen and send a note at once. We do not ask for long articles, but let us have something.

☞ Through a private letter to Bro. J. G. Hook, we learn that Bro. Swanesburg, of Shelburne, N. S., since Oct. 9th, has been prostrated with sickness, and at times quite low from hemorrhage of the lungs. His family need your prayers and Christian sympathy. Bro. S. is a good man, and what any generous heart may do for him and his, will be the same as done unto Him who said—"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

"HEALTH BY GOOD LIVING."

This is the title of a new work by Dr. Hall, of Hall's "Journal of Health," which I have read with eagerness, and am very free to say it is by far the best work on the subject I have ever read. It is as full of good common sense "as an egg is full of meat." The great majority of people get sick and die, because they do not know how to live. This book clearly points out the way, and if people will only read it, and practise what it teaches, a vast amount of sickness, suffering and death, will be avoided. This book ought to be in every family in the land. It is greatly needed. Send for it at once, and read and practise what it teaches, and my word for it, you never will regret it.

A. P. Moore.

The above valuable work is for sale at this office, and will be sent by mail to the address of any one remitting publisher's price—$1.50 per copy. Ag't.

TIME'S FAREWELL.

We have just published a tract with the above title, written by Bro. O. D. Woodruff. A good, stirring, timely tract; just the thing to scatter everywhere, and should be scattered by the thousands. Price by mail, 10 cents per dozen; 75 cents per hundred; $6.20 per thousand. Ag't.

CATHOLIC PROTEST.

The Roman Catholics are quite aroused against the Italians for taking away the temporal power of the Pope. They are holding mass meetings in the United States for the purpose of taking measures, if possible, to reinstate the Pope in his kingdom. They are free to admit that without temporal power, the Pope is but a subject. They are satisfied that Papacy has received a deadly blow, from which it cannot recover, unless the temporal power is restored. It is probable that a very earnest effort will be made by the Catholics to accomplish its restoration.

The following is a sample of what is being done:—

"Philadelphia, Dec. 4.—A mass meeting of the Roman Catholic laity of this city was held in the Cathedral this afternoon, to protest against the seizure of the Italian principalities of the Pope by the King of Italy. Much enthusiasm was manifested, and numerous civic orders paraded with full brass bands. Judge James Campbell presided, and among the speakers were the Hon. Jos. R. Chandler, Daniel Dougherty, and J. P. O'Neill. As an expression of the spirit of the meeting, the following protest was unanimously adopted:

First: We protest against the spoliation of the Holy Father as citizens, and as lovers of right, justice, and social order, because it is a violation of right and justice, and tends to the overthrow of all civil society. No ruler in the world holds his temporal authority by titles stronger or more venerable than the Holy Father. The invasion and appropriation of his temporal possessions is simply a robbery, consummated by brute force.

Second: We protest against the spoliation of the Holy Father as Catholics, because it is a sacrilegious invasion of rights consecrated by justice and religion. The Holy Father holds his temporalities in virtue of his sublime position as Supreme head of the Catholic church, and therefore holds them in trust for the whole Catholic world. He can neither dispose of them, nor can he yield to their forced alienation, without a public and solemn protest and reclamation.

Third: We protest against the spoliation of the Holy Father as Catholics, because it trammels him, and deprives him of that freedom and independence which are necessary in the government of the church. In many things he would be restrained from action, and his motus proprios would always be open to suspicion. To place the Supreme Head of the Church on earth in the relation of a subject to any temporal Prince is either utterly to despoil him of his power or to render its exercise impossible.

Fourth: We protest against the spoliation of the Holy Father as Catholics, because it interferes with that freedom of access to him on the part of the Episcopate, the priesthood, and the people, which is essential to the maintenance and propagation of the Christian faith. All history bears witness to the fact that, in proportion as this facility of intercourse has existed, the true faith has been preserved in its purity and integrity, and the maxims of the gospel of Jesus Christ upheld in the face of a hostile world.

Fifth: We protest against the spoliation of the Holy Father because it has been the cause of the suspension of the Æcumenical Council, from which we justly anticipated great and important results, for the honor and glory of God, and the salvation of immortal souls; and especially because the re-assembling of this august and venerable Council will be impossible, until the present violent state of things ceases to exist, and the Holy Father is again placed in full possession of his sacred rights."

The following is a notice of a similar meeting in New York:—

"A large audience gathered in St. Patrick's Cathedral to listen to the reading of the address to the Pope. No music or service of any kind preceded the meeting. At eight o'clock the following clergy and laymen advanced from the vestry-room and seated themselves on the platform outside the chancel: Vicar-General Starrs, the Rev. Dr. P. G. McSweeney, the Rev. Dr. McGean, the Hon. John McKeon, James Hunt, Dennis Carolin, P. Dolan, Mr. O'Keefe, T. W. McKinly, T. O'Donohue, and P. Hogan. Vicar-General Starrs was elected Chairman, and the Hon. John McKeon Secretary. The Vicar-General said:

We have assembled here to-night to adopt, in union with the other Roman Catholic clergy and laity of New York, an address of sympathy with our Holy Father in his present unhappy circumstances, and at the same time to protest against the invasion of the liberty of the church of God in the person of its head, both as an outrage against the sacred prerogative of His Holiness as Supreme Pontiff of the Church of Rome and as a violation of the right which we, as Catholics, possess of being governed by a chief completely independent of all civil authority, for in no other condition could our intercourse with him be free and unrestricted. We, therefore, think it our duty to protest, in the most emphatic manner, against the outrage to which he has been subjected.

This protest may not now have its due effect, but in time it cannot fail to tell throughout the world in favor of the church of God and our Holy Father. Let us show that we firmly believe in the doctrine that the temporal power is necessary to enable him to exercise all his duties freely and independently. He cannot be a subject; for if he is he cannot act of his own free will in all things.

The Hon. John McKeon said, on rising to read the address: I hold in my hand an address, which is echoed by every Catholic in the city. It is a magnificent spectacle to see thousands of Catholics assemble this night to protest against the wrong done our Holy Father. We live in an age in which public opinion is stronger than cannon. The voice of millions of Catholics throughout the world will make itself heard when it protests against the King of Italy, without any sanction whatever, wronging the Pope in the place where he had been put by divine right. The address was unanimously adopted, and the chairman and secretary were authorized to sign it on behalf of the meeting.

The proceedings in the other Roman Catholic churches were of like nature, some of the meetings being held in the evening and others in the afternoon."

These movements are ominous. We may expect to see greater things soon. The evidence of Christ's coming continues to increase. We are almost home. Praise the Lord.

MODERN SKEPTICISM.

That skepticism is rapidly advancing is a fact too apparent to be denied by any careful observer. The following from the N. Y. Independent gives a faithful statement of the case:

"We believe that a great change is preparing in religious opinion, of which these and many of our best men know almost nothing. To those who are thrown into the currents of life, it is evident that men's minds are in unusual working, and that the very foundations of religious belief are rotten and shaking. Among all the earnest-minded young men who are at this moment leading in thought and action in America, we venture to say that four-fifths are skeptical even of the great historical facts of christianity.

What is told as christian doctrine by the churches, is not even considered by them. And furthermore, there is among them a general ill-concealed distrust of the clerical body as a class, and an utter disgust with the very aspect of modern christianity and of church worship. This skepticism is not flippant; little is said about it. It is not a peculiarity alone of the radicals and fanatics; many of them are men of calm and even balance of mind, and belong to no class of ultraists. It is not worldly and selfish. The doubters lead in the bravest and most self-denying enterprises of the day. It is not an unbelief to be laughed at, or hunted down. It is calm, abiding, earnest, sorrowful.

Not much is known of it above; but it underlies now all the strongest external movement. There are, however, glimpses of it. You see it the daily diminishing influence of the pulpit, and the increasing influence of the press; in the lessening number of strong and original minds who take hold of theology, and the tone of the men who are leading American thought. It speaks in those strange longings for new revelations, and in the occasional denunciations of the old."

Apology to Wisconsin Friends.—I have been delayed in filling a part of my orders for tracts to scatter free in Wis., owing to sickness among my printers. Orders came so plentifully that they swept off all the tracts I had on hand, and compelled me to wait for a new edition. To-day I sent out over one thousand copies in one mail, besides having sent smaller quantities several times previously, over four hundred copies at a time in one of these previous instances; but in sending this time (through some mistake of my printer), I had only two hundred and fifty copies of "Immaterialism," and they did not hold out; so some of my friends will not find a copy of this tract in their package, but other tracts in its stead. I thought it better to send such as I had, rather than to delay the orders any longer. All orders are now filled, and I must now stop sending free, till I get funds to continue the work.

These orders for free tracts have revealed to me some forty persons of our faith in Wis., that I did not know of before, hid away in distant counties and remote corners of the State. May they be enabled by the aid of these tracts to enlighten many of their neighbors.

If I could command the thousands of dollars that some of our brethren possess, I would convert a portion of it into tracts, and make the offer to other States that I have been making to Wis.; but if I were to make that offer to all the States, I am sure fifty thousand copies would not fill all the orders. Wish I were able. But I will content myself to do as much and as fast as my limited means will allow, till the way opens to do more.

"PREACHING THE KINGDOM OF GOD."

Paul, while "preaching the kingdom of God," did not preach a kingdom destitute of territory, king, or subjects; but rather a kingdom to exist in a certain locality, under the supervision of a particular King, having subjects of a certain character. But his preaching differed widely from much of the preaching at the present day, in several particulars; and it differed in several respects also from the theology of the Jews, while in other respects he agreed with them. He had no controversy with the Jews concerning the location of the kingdom, both parties believing that the King of that kingdom was referred to in Jer. 23: 5, 6, "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely; and this is his name whereby he shall be called, The Lord our Righteousness": hence both parties looked for this King to reign on earth, when the time arrived for the establishment of his kingdom. Both parties believed in the final restoration of David's throne, under the promised "seed" of David.

In preaching to the Jews, Paul did not find it necessary to refute the doctrine of a sky kingdom, for the Jews had never embraced that notion. The Sadducees, who regarded death as an endless sleep, could not have believed such a theory; and the Pharisees, who had received from the heathen the dogma of life in death, had also imbibed from the same source, and at the same time, the doctrine of "rewards and punishments under the earth," with a slight alteration; so neither the Pharisees nor Sadducees held to the doctrine of a sky kingdom—both of these sects believed in the establishment of the Messiah's kingdom on the earth, when the true Messiah should appear. Still Paul differed with them:

1. When Paul proclaimed Jesus as the true Messiah, and consequently the personage who was destined to be King of the promised kingdom, they objected, and denounced Christ as an impostor; and they predicated their objection to the Messiahship of Jesus on one of the very facts that Paul adduced to prove it—the death of Jesus—for the Jews said, "We have heard out of the law that Christ abideth forever"; hence, they regarded the fact of his death the strongest proof that he could not have been the true Messiah. The scripture cited by them is contained in the oath of Jehovah (Ps. 89: 36), "His seed shall endure forever." They were correct in applying this "seed" to the Christ, but blundered in overlooking the fact that allusion was made to him after his elevation to the throne—that from that time onward he should abide forever. But Paul met them with the powerful argument that (1) Jesus Christ came at the right time to be the true Messiah, and (2) that the true Messiah must die in fulfillment of scripture before he could reign. Paul thus speaks on the first point: "When the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law." Gal. 4: 4. The measurement here referred to by "the time" must be the "sixty-nine weeks" that were to reach "unto Messiah the prince," for no other time reaching to the birth of Christ can be found in the Bible. So the substance of Paul's argument is this: the true Messiah was to come when "the fulness of the time" had arrived, or when the time that was to reach unto Messiah had expired; and Jesus came at that very point of time; and no competitor then arose to dispute his claim, he must be the true Messiah, for the true Messiah must come at the right time. This argument has never been set aside by the Jews. Jesus came at the right time, while none of their false Messiahs ever have or ever can come at the end of the sixty-nine weeks.

Moreover, Paul preached that the Scriptures required the death of the true Messiah: "Christ died according to the Scriptures." And the Scriptures not only foretold the death of the Messiah, but also specified the time of his death. "The street shall be built again, and the wall [of Jerusalem], even in troublous times. And after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off.' Dan. 9: 26. Thus the death of Messiah was due in sixty-two prophetic weeks from the erection of Jerusalem's wall, and Jesus died at just the right time to be the true Messiah, while no other pretender to the Messiahship ever did or ever can die at the end of that measurement of time. So here was double proof against the theory of the Jews—proof that the true Messiah must die before he could reign, for after being seated upon David's throne, he should "endure forever"; and also proof that Jesus was that Messiah, from the fact that he died at the right time to fulfill the prediction. So the effort of the Jews to set aside Christ as the true Messiah, to evade the fact of his future reign, was forestalled by one measurement of time reaching to his birth, and by another reaching to his death, proving incontrovertibly the present Messiahship, and consequently the future kingship of Jesus.

Paul also set up the claim that the true Messiah must be also raised according to the Scriptures: "Neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption. Thou wilt show me the path of life." Ps. 16: 10, 11. Though the Messiah, or God's "Holy One," was to enter death's embrace, God was to show him the "path of life" out of death's dark dominion, before he should have time to see corruption; all of which was true in the case of Jesus, confirming his claim to the Messiahship, and proving him the prospective King of the coming kingdom which Paul was preaching, to have its commencement at Christ's return from heaven, "who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom." 2 Tim. 4: 1. Here the kingdom is interwoven with the appearing of Christ, and the judgment day, just where the kingdom ought to begin, as unjudged men are not entitled to a home in the kingdom.

Thus Paul, in "preaching the kingdom of God," preached a kingdom to begin after the resurrection of the dead saints to share in its glories; and he preached Christ as its King, though recognising him as the "Mediator" of the race till the arrival of the judgment scene.

2. Paul preached also a sentiment that the Jews could not subscribe to concerning the principle of heirship to that kingdom; for the Jews felt like saying, "We have Abraham to our father," while Paul repudiated the principle of blood-relationship as a claim to the kingdom, and substituted the principle of righteousness, by which Gentiles, as well as Jews, might be made sharers in the kingdom; affirming, "That the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel." Eph. 3: 6.

In denying the validity of this fleshly claim to the kingdom, Paul was at war with Jewish theology. He also protested against the genuineness of a claim to the kingdom founded on the principle of good works. "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost." Titus 3: 5. Here the great fact is presented, that morality will not entitle us to an entrance into the kingdom, but a "renewing of the Holy Ghost" must precede our admission. This same prerequisite is alluded to in the following language: "Be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind." Rom. 12: 2. Said Paul, "Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God." 1 Cor. 6: 9. Again he remarks: "By one spirit we are all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one spirit." 1 Cor. 12: 13. Again: "Being made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness."—Romans 6: 18. Also—God "now commandeth all men everywhere to repent; . . . because he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead." Acts 17: 30, 31. Thus Paul, in preaching the kingdom of God, proclaimed repentance of sin, and a renewing work of the Spirit in the heart, as prerequisites to a passport into it, both upon the part of the Jew and of the Gentile; both being entitled to it on the same terms—reconciliation to God; for "if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

In short, Paul's theology of the kingdom was (1), a heavenly kingdom to exist on earth; (2), the King to be the promised Messiah, after his death, resurrection, mediatorship, and judgeship; (3), the subjects being a class of men made free from sin in this life, and free from mortality at the resurrection of the just; for "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God"—that is, in a mortal state; for if flesh immortalized were excluded, it would shut Christ himself out of the kingdom; but Paul explains the matter by telling us, "We shall all be changed," or immortalized, "at the last trump." W. S.

Address.—Occasionally friends write me at Boston, Mass., and Buchanan, Mich., and on business matters pertaining to both offices. Let it be remembered, (1.) that Brodhead, Wis., is my address; (2.) that business matters should be addressed to the resident Editor, and not to me. W. S.

Abusing Ministers.—Not many ministers get abused through maliciousness, but they frequently get badly misused through misdirected kindness, or acts intended as acts of kindness, among which are these:

1. Putting ministers into the nice spare bed, without previously airing it. I have taken the worst colds in my life in this manner. Beds that have been unoccupied for long weeks will gather dampness, and will often unfit a minister for service for weeks. I have so often felt the effect of sleeping in damp beds, I make this plea for my brethren. Give them a bed that is not damp, even if not as good. It is often said, "I do not believe the bed is damp; it feels dry"; when one night's experiment will give the minister a sore throat that he will complain of for a week or more. It is enough to know that the bed has been unoccupied for a week or two.

2. Some ministers will eat all the different kinds of rich food set before them, greatly to their injury; and the best way to prevent this self-abuse is to educate the sisters to prepare only suitable, plain food for the minister when he comes. It will be easier for the sisters, better for the ministers, and also be eating to the glory of God. Try it. W. S.

Questions.—An Eastern correspondent wishes to know why I make the toes of the "Image" symbolize the ten divisions of the Roman empire, instead of ten divisions in Italy? Because Daniel says: "The fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron; . . . . and whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potter's clay, and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided." Dan. 2: 40, 41. What shall be divided? "The kingdom" previously spoken of—"the fourth kingdom"; and that is certainly the Roman Empire, and not Italy. This fact cannot be set aside. No matter how many divisions Italy may contain, they are not divisions of the fourth kingdom, but merely sub-divisions, or divisions of a division. Besides this, the same fourth kingdom is again symbolized by the fourth beast, and its divisions are symbolized by ten horns, and all agree that these symbolize the divisions of the Roman empire. Now is it probable that Daniel would have overlooked these great divisions of the fourth kingdom, in the other instance, and picked out ten diminutive divisions of a mere division of the kingdom—subdivisions—and called them divisions of the kingdom?

Again, I am inquired of if the toes should not have been of more than ordinary length to fitly symbolize the divisions of the Roman empire? The same objection would hold just as good against the horns of the fourth beast, and make the horns too long. Neither the toes nor the horns are presented to give the duration of the divisions, but the fact merely, regardless of the time of their existence. Both symbolize divisions of the same kingdom, and not divisions of a division, or fragments of a fragment. W. S.

I am Here.—Where? In Saratoga. What are you doing there? Endeavoring to practice what I preach. Well, what is that, pray? To do daily and hourly present duty; to do it patiently and honestly, as it presents itself; to do it at the moment of call; to do it without reference to present rewards. Never mind whether it be known, or acknowledged, or not. But do not fail to do it. And failure to reap a glorious reward in due time will be impossible.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 24th 1870, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

For the World's Crisis.

TO MY AMERICAN BRETHREN.

Dear Brethren: You are doubtless all well acquainted with the work which is being done in England to disseminate the truth as we see it. You have all heard of the Rainbow—the monthly that advocates it. You have all read articles which have been taken from its pages. I am lately from England, and have been before I visited this country on corresponding terms with its talented editor, Dr. Leask. There is no society to back him up. And the truth has not as yet taken such a mighty hold there, as it has in the New World; or, if it has, it is not so openly manifest. So, all the weight rests on the shoulders of a few.

Thinking that some of the brethren would perhaps like to take that monthly for a year, and knowing of no better time than the present to begin, I have written this to say that it will give me much pleasure to receive orders for this monthly. The price is $2.25 a year, post-free. Can I not receive two hundred subscribers at once? Will my dear brethren in the ministry secure two subscribers each, and forward their names and subscriptions to me?

And there is just one thing more. Just before I left England, Prebendary Constable of Cork forwarded me his masterly work entitled—"The Duration and Nature of Future Punishment." It is 65 cts. per copy. Should any desire a copy, I shall be pleased to order it for them. What response shall I have, dear brethren? Yours in the best of bonds,

No. Scituate, R. I. W. Kellaway.

For the World's Crisis.

EAST DEERING, N. H.

The meeting commenced Nov. 13th, by Eld. L. Boutell, and was continued over Sabbath, the 20th. Meetings every evening. Those in full sympathy with the meeting, though few in number, were constant in attendance, and ready with their testimony for the truth. Others there were, a few dear ones in Jesus, ready to work in harmony with us for the salvation of the perishing. God bless them, and lead them into all truth. The old gospel plough was well put in, some fallow ground broken up, and the seed well sown. How much fell by the way-side, or on the rock, or among thorns, we cannot tell. Some we doubt not fell on good ground, and will yet spring up and bear glorious fruit. The meeting was altogether a source of great comfort to those earnest, longing, praying hearts, whose desire for years has been that "the truth" so dear to them might be preached to this people. Bro. Boutell's visit, by the way, at the home of the writer, was attended by the special blessings of the Spirit.

Monday evening, Dec. 5th, a meeting was held by Sister Boynton, of Plymouth, Mass.; also Tuesday afternoon and evening, Dec. 6th. Sister Saulpaugh was also present, and as usual put in a "laboring oar." Coming in the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ, the Lord was with them, and the meetings were truly excellent.

We feel to thank God that there are ears open to the "Macedonian cry"; that there are earnest, efficient, faithful men and women laboring in the gospel, who are willing to spend and be spent in the Master's service; who can say with Paul, "I seek not yours, but you." There are many places in this section where the gospel of the speedy coming of Christ has not been preached, and the truths we hold dear are almost or quite unknown. We are glad that something is being done in response to the call from the South. The Lord be with those who have gone, and add his blessing to their labors. But there is yet a field open for true missionary labor to those who remain at home. Close by your very doors are people sitting in the darkness of superstition and ignorance as profound as that which envelopes the large majority of communities in our Southern States. Let the light shine unto them. Let the glorious doctrine of immortality through Christ alone, the evidences of the Lord's coming, and the nearness of the judgment, be proclaimed through all our borders. There are in all our towns large numbers of those who have been fed with "chaff" till they demand better food. There are larger numbers who have refused the offered semblance, but would readily accept the pure wheat of the gospel.

Sometimes there is a single family of believers, or it may be a single individual, so surrounded by adverse influences that to let their light shine seems almost impossible. Let us remember that if God be for us, there can be none against us to do us serious hurt. We can live by our faith; we can speak the truth in love; we can scatter tracts free as the autumn leaves, and so prepare the way of those who will afterward come and preach. Let us each do our part, and God will bless, and souls be saved and will go rejoicing into "the kingdom."

CLINTON ARCH MISSION.

Little more than a year ago, the above-named branch of the Lord's vineyard was first announced through our family paper, the Crisis. Its first location was 169 Allen St., N. Y., where, with a close application to the varied duties incident to mission work, the hungry were fed, the naked were clothed, and the poor had the gospel given them in all its purity and simplicity.

In the sailor boarding-house alone, situated in a dark, filthy alley, near the East river, were seeds of gospel truth planted, which have already resulted in the salvation of several precious souls; and we believe as they sailed for various ports, with the tracts, papers, and humble teachings, received from the Lord's unworthy laborers, truth was indeed sown beside many waters, and its springing up unto life eternal will be apparent in the day of God. Then, too, our other meetings, together with Sabbath School and Bible class, also sick bed visitations, were attended with interest, and productive of good. To God be all the glory.

Owing to the unhealthfulness, as well as the inconvenience of the location, the Mission was transferred to 48 Watts St., which last-named place was more favorable for holding meetings at our rooms. Hence all of the meetings, also Bible class and Sabbath School, were held at the Mission rooms. There, too, supplies were received and dispensed.

Thus the work went on till the 30th of Nov., when, in consequence of the death of its faithful head, and the ill health of another of its missionaries, the Mission closed, with many sad regrets; for the whitened fields are so large, the laborers so few, and the great gathering day so near. But while we bow in silence and in sadness to the mandate, we enjoy the consciousness that we have endeavored to do what we could for the salvation of the lost and the relief of the distressed. And though we have never advertised largely, yet the Lord has ever had his eye upon this Mission, and his ear has ever been open to its appeals; and the needful has come just in time, always; for which we humbly thank his dear name.

We also here extend our hearty thanks to our many sympathizers and contributors, for their many favors so kindly bestowed, and which, we believe, have all been privately acknowledged, also duly reported in our books, which are open for the inspection of our committee, whose names are seen upon our cards.

In conclusion we will say,—though some, from not having been acquainted in New York, or for some other reason, have failed to find the Mission, and have reported its non-existence, yet from its commencement to its close it has been in operation, except during the hot season, when the work was suspended on account of the physical indisposition of the laborers, especially of Sr. Mellen, whose health had suffered greatly from exposure, and the very unhealthy atmosphere by which we were surrounded. But as our all is in the hands of Him who judgeth righteously, we feel sure he will take care of all results.

Correspondence.

From Bro. I. Damman.

Bro. Grant:—Having returned from a short trip up the Penobscot to visit the poor, scattered flock, where they have but little preaching about the Lord's coming and kindred truths, I send a word of encouragement. I found Bro. Whitney quite discouraged, being alone in that destitute field, with none to help him in the work, but many to oppose. There were a number in that section that had not been baptized, that had been blest under his administration. I felt it my duty to lay hands on him in the name of the Lord, and acknowledge that he was called of God to preach the word, baptize, break bread, and do the work of an evangelist, taking the oversight of the flock, not by constraint, nor filthy lucre's sake, but with a ready mind. I left Bro. Whitney in good spirits and courage to renew his toils again.

The saints were much comforted by the word, and a number of new ones manifested by rising a desire to meet us in the kingdom of God. The following day, we came to another neighborhood and preached on Monday evening to a class of professors of different faiths, but concluded that the Bible truth was good enough to believe and practice, and thanked God for the word of life through Jesus Christ. They expressed much desire for me to return soon.

My good horse died there; so now I am without a horse, but not disheartened. I feel the loss. "All things work together for good to them that love God." He is my trust. I wait for the opening of kind Providence. Remember me, dear brethren, in your prayers.

Israel Damman.

From Sr. C. Case.

To the dear brethren and sisters scattered abroad, greeting:—

As I look over the scores of appointments of our preaching brethren and sisters, who are still laboring in old fields, where the fallow ground has long since been broken up, where the prophecies concerning the speedy coming of Christ have been rehearsed in their ears, till the message has been rejected time after time, till the testimony of Peter concerning the last-day scoffers has been fulfilled to the very letter; and realizing there are scores and hundreds in new fields, here in the west, to whom these truths have never been presented, who probably would embrace them if presented in a right manner, by those whom the Lord sends (as no others are needed in any fields,) my heart sinks within me. When I think of the time as being so very near, when the very same Jesus is coming back again to reward his saints, and destroy the wicked with the brightness of his coming, the cry is extorted, O Lord, send some one here full of faith and the Holy Spirit, who is as wise as a serpent and harmless as a dove, to declare this truth to the people. The question arises, is it not the will of God that a little company be raised up here who are ready to search the Scriptures to see whether these things are so, who will stand up for the truth in the face of all opposition? Lord, hasten the time. Says Jesus, "When I sent you without purse or scrip, . . . lacked ye any thing? and they said, "nothing."

Belvidere, Ill. C. Case.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. L. Boutell writes:—"By the goodness of God and the help of the chariots that run like the lightning, I was conveyed last Saturday, the 10th, to this place. I was met by the brethren at the depot welcoming me to their fellowship and association. They directly introduced me, for my home, to the family of Bro. W. J. Greene. I soon found my peace rested there. Saturday evening was spent in free conversation, and I found I was with the Bro. that had had almost as wonderful a conversion from idols to Christ, from error to truth, as the apostle Paul. Such a contrast, as he was relating his experience, was remarkable. Nothing but the Spirit and power of God could have wrought such a change, such a deliverance from the power of the enemy, and sweetly brought in harmony with the will of God. The whole family also were brought under the same heavenly influence. I find it blessed to enjoy their association and hospitality. We hope to be mutually benefitted.

Sunday morning, I went to their chapel. Our love-feast was blessed, the time well taken up in living testimonies. In the afternoon and evening I preached to a full house, when the expression of their countenances plainly indicated their love for the 'blessed hope,' and the simple truth of the Bible. They are by the grace of God determined to follow the word of life. They love a tangible hope, and have respect, like Moses, to the recompense of reward. Eternal life and an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and unfading, they grasp with eagerness, and contend earnestly for it; and I shall do my part to strengthen their faith and encourage them on. We have conference and preaching meetings every evening, well attended, with cheering prospects.

The truth preached here by Bro. Grant has taken deep root, and is still gaining converts. It is soul-cheering to see truth triumphing over error and tradition. We are having blessed good times. Glory be to God, the author of all good.

I stay here still longer, as providence directs."

Bro. J. B. Wadsworth writes:—"I am still in Memphis, Tenn., but as my long looked for book has come, I expect to visit another city after disposing of what I can here. The book is entitled "A Colporteur's Notes." You remember perhaps seeing an advertisement in a letter in the Crisis that the price of the book would be twenty-five cents; but as the book is not quite as large as I expected, the price is only ten cents. I have had a picture lithographed, Daniel in the den of lions. It is printed on good heavy paper, 22 × 28. It can be sent framed, 20 × 24 or 18 × 22, or put on rollers, just as the person chooses. I will send the picture and the book in good order to any address, on the recept of fifty cents. I trust this book and picture will accomplish much good to the cause of Christ. All those who have paid in advance will receive the book and the value of their money sent. My P. O. Box is 634."

Bro. T. J. Hobbs writes from Clear Creek, Mo.:—"I have recently embraced the blessed hope of life and immortality through Christ. I now desire, and am determined by the grace of God, to live a holy and consecrated life. Eld. A. F. Dugger has just closed a protracted meeting in this place. He preached twenty sermons, which resulted in an addition of sixteen precious souls to the church, most of them heads of families. Some were from other churches, who were before bitter enemies to the Advent doctrine. But they came out to hear, became interested, and so have at last come out on the side of truth. Praise the Lord. Bro. Dugger organized the church here two years ago this winter. It is in a growing and prosperous condition. We feel much encouraged to press on in the good work, knowing that our reward is certain."

Bro. I. C. Wellcome writes:—"The call published in the Crisis, a short time since, 'from one who knows' the case of Bro. J. Carr, should meet a hearty response from those who have the Lord's goods to bestow upon the needy. Bro. Carr has traveled and preached for several years, in ill health, getting very little to pay expenses, and then laid by sick a long time, with no cash in hand, no stock in bank or in trade, no income,—nothing to pay accumulating expenses. He is worthy of help. Those who wish to help a poor preacher in need, send by mail to Eld. Jeremiah Carr, South Albion, Maine."

Bro. C. Colegrove writes from Sardinia, Erie Co., N. Y.:—"The sick and suffering sister, Luthera B. Weaver, wrote me, expressing her earnest gratitude for some pecuniary aid which generous friends had sent, and said, no doubt truly, that it was exceedingly needed. Other kind hearts may prompt yet other good deeds in the same direction, and their gifts abound through her thanksgiving to the glory of God.

'Alarm Bell,' No. 2, is nearly ready. Subject, the Franco-Prussian War and the Prince of the Covenant. Any who wish copies, write to me, and they shall be freely sent, with or without remuneration."

Obituaries.

Park. Fell asleep in Jesus, Nov. 9th, at half-past seven o'clock, P. M., Sarah Ann, wife of Auley M. Park, of Philadelphia, aged sixty-six years.

Sister Park needs no written eulogy. Wherever she was known she was greatly beloved. She visited the widow and the fatherless in their affliction, and there are many such who call her blessed. She fed the hungry, clothed the naked, visited the sick, and administered to many of the wants of the poor, and multitudes of such mourn her loss. She was an affectionate wife, a faithful mother, a cheerful companion, a true friend, an excellent counsellor, an ardent lover of Christ and his word, and waited for his return from heaven. She grew constantly in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and willingly suffered reproach from the enemies of the blessed hope.

Several weeks before her decease, she met with a severe accident—a fall—by which she was badly bruised, and an arm broken, but was rapidly recovering, when a sudden stroke of paralysis prostrated her once more, and, after four days, she breathed her last without a struggle. A beloved companion and children, and a large circle of friends mourn for her, but not as those who have no hope, for we believe that Jesus died and rose again; even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. The funeral services were conducted by Elder Hook assisted by Elder Taylor. F. H. Burbank.

Derickson. Died, near Clayton, Contra Costa Co., Cal., Sept. 16th, Mrs. Betsey N., wife of Daniel D. Derickson, formerly of Fairhaven, Mass., aged fifty-eight years and four months.

She was a believer in the soon coming of the Lord, and has been one with the Advent people since 1844. She died firm in the faith of immortality through Jesus Christ, hoping for a part in the first resurrection. S. F. Taynton.

Smith. Died, in Dalton, Mass., Nov. 29th, 1870, Helen Maria, youngest child of Bro. J. S. and Sr. E. Smith, aged eight years and ten months.

Words of comfort to the bereaved friends were spoken by Sr. Elizabeth Warren, from Psalm 30: 5. "It is well with the child." F. B. Bradford.

Pike. Died, in Philipston, Mass., Dec. 7th, 1870, Mary N., wife of Eld. S. Pike, aged sixty-six years.

Sr. Pike found comfort and consolation in the blessed hope during her sickness, which was of one year and six months' duration. She was aware of the approach of death, and calmly made arrangements in relation to her funeral, on which occasion words of comfort were spoken by the writer, from 1 Thess. 4: 18. God bless the bereaved, and hasten the day when the great Life-giver shall come. J. Hemenway.

Weaver. Died, in South Killingly, Ct., Oct. 20th, 1870, Fanny Weaver, aged twenty-four years and seven weeks.

Thus a young and affectionate husband has early been deprived of the companion of his youth, and the parents of a lovely daughter, who deeply mourn their great loss. This constitutes ten out of eleven that death has snatched away from the pleasant home of these parents; but they mourn not as others that have no hope. The resurrection will bring them back from the land of the enemy. E. Bellows.

Marston. Died, in Meredith, N. H., Nov. 27th, 1870, of scarlet fever, Millie P., only daughter of Emerson S. and Ellen J. Marston, aged seven years and two months.

Words of comfort were spoken on the occasion by the writer, from 2 Kings 4: 26,—"It is well with the child." N. Glidden.

Cuffee. Died, in Shinnecock, Southampton, L. I., Dec. 3d, of typhoid fever, Louise M., daughter of Warren and Frances I. Cuffee, aged thirteen months and nine days. A. Wheeler.

Harmon. Died, in Bloomfield, Vt., Sept. 16th, 1870, Jane W., daughter of Richard and Mary Ann Harmon, aged seventeen years. M. A. Rowell.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

London, Dec. 15.—German advices state that Garibaldi's resignation is the result of careful deliberation, he having become convinced that further resistance on the part of France is a mere sacrifice of human life. Garibaldi returns to Italy at once.

The abrogation by Prussia of the treaty of 1867 causes serious apprehension here. It is semi-officially stated that England intends armed resistance against the encroachment of Prussia upon Belgium. The connivance of the King of Holland with Bismarck in the occupation of Luxembourg and future German aggrandizement is strongly suspected.

Berlin, Dec. 13.—The army of occupation is now in motion, and goes direct from Germany to occupy Luxembourg.

Advices have been received here of the capitulation of Phalsburg, (at the foot of the Vosges mountains,) after a stubborn resistance. This town was held by a portion of Garibaldi's army, and its surrender is another serious blow to the French.

French advices state that the French army under Gen. Fordherle, have taken La Fire.

Bordeaux, Dec. 14.—All the members of the diplomatic corps recently stationed at Tours have arrived in this city.

The government is in receipt of a despatch from M. Gambetta, dated from the headquarters of the second army of the Loire, in which he says that Gen. Chansey's army has been continuously fighting for three days, and has maintained its position against the masses of Prince Frederick Charles, whose army has met with severe repulses. M. Gambetta adds that the armies of the Loire are in splendid condition, and that they are all confident and hopeful.

Berlin, Dec. 14. King William telegraphs to Queen Augusta from Versailles that the French army of the Loire has received another repulse near Beaugency, and is now rapidly retreating towards Blois and Tours. The preparation for the bombardment of Paris has been completed, and concentrated fire of no less than eighty batteries will be brought to bear on the city and fortifications.

Dec. 15.—The French army operating on the Loire has suffered another defeat, and is being driven back upon Tours. The army of Prince Frederick Charles has occupied the city of Blois, capturing large quantities of army stores and several cannon. The French are in full retreat.

London, Dec. 15.—The army of General Manteuffel captured the town of Fecamp, 21 miles north east of Havre, on the English Channel, yesterday. A contribution of five hundred thousand francs has been levied upon the citizens.

Intelligence received to-day from Havre, dated Tuesday, states that the French Gen. Moignart started on that day with 3000 men to assume the offensive against the Prussians approaching the city.

London, Dec. 15. The Papal Envoy, M. Kogman, arrived at Versailles on the 12th inst. with important dispatches from the Pope to Bismarck and the King. It is certain that the King promised the Pope to restore to him his temporal power as soon as the present war ends.

London, Dec. 16.—King William, of Holland, has telegraphed to the Government of Luxembourg that he will defend the treaty of 1867, and the honor and independence of the Duchy. He also approves the acts of the Government of Luxembourg.

The opinion strengthens that Prussia will take Luxembourg and Holland instead of Alsace and Lorraine, and that the war will end with the restoration of the Empire.

The French Government urges Austria to demand the restoration of the 3000 Austrian railway cars seized and held by the Prussians.

The French garrison at Belfort still makes a gallant defence. The neighboring heights have all been captured by the Germans, but not without suffering considerable loss. The French losses in these preliminary engagements were comparatively light. The German position has greatly improved lately.

DOMESTIC.

Washington, Dec. 18. Minister Bancroft writes to Secretary Fish that the accomplishment of German unity so speedily is a surprise even to King William himself. Prior to the war, the King only lived in hope that such an event would be accomplished, but, Mr. Bancroft says, the King never expected to see it accomplished in his day.

In Brief.

— Probably no female sovereign since "Bloody Mary" has been so thoroughly under priestly influence as the French Empress. The power that the Catholic clergy have had over her has been the road to them by which to reach the Emperor, and to gain the points to their advantage.—Some careful man has ascertained that the average head contains 130,000 hairs. The average moustache contains about fourteen.—A Chicago, Ill., despatch says that statistics just collected show that five hundred and fifty suits for divorce were commenced in the courts last year, of which three hundred and fifty were by women and two hundred by men. One attorney commenced two hundred and forty of these cases.

Catholic View of the Pope's Position.—According to Archbishop Spaulding, who is the leading prelate of the Roman Catholic Church in America, Pope Pius IX. is in a much worse position than most men had supposed—or in other words, that the absorption of Rome by Italy is a far more important step than the public generally had imagined. He maintains that the Holy Father "is a prisoner to all intents and purposes" that "the invasion of the Papal territory by King Victor Emanuel transcends in guilt any outrage of the century;" that the plebiscite submitted to the people was a sham and a farce; and that the Œcumenical Council would have lasted a year or so longer if it had not been for this treacherous invasion." There were, he adds, forty important questions left untouched when the Council broke up. Why did it break up, then? Because, says this distinguished prelate, "the bishops had to fly for their lives," and "murder at this moment stalks unchallenged through the streets of Rome." These are serious assertions to come from such a source.—Journal.

Is it True?—That the religious societies, as a whole, are losing their moral power? Do not all living christians see this? Will not this sad truth for the sect power, become more and more manifest to the end of time? If the above be true, is it not safe to walk with Jesus in white? Will not the light of such shine more and more to the perfect day?—The Church.

Notice.

There will be a meeting of saints held at Goffstown, N. H., commencing Dec. 28th, at seven o'clock P. M., to continue over the following Sabbath, at which time there will be a watch meeting. The design of this meeting is to work for the good of the people. Brethren and sisters are invited to attend from other towns. A special invitation is given to the young preaching brethren to be present, whether in or out of the State. We also invite other brethren to come, who can work in harmony with the truth and the Spirit of God. Ample provisions, as far as possible, will be made for those who wish to attend. Those going by R. R. by way of Manchester, can take the cars at 10 A. M., and 4.55 P. M. on the North Weare R. R. Let prayers be offered to God in behalf of this meeting, that sinners may be brought to Christ. Allen Daman.

P. S. Other churches wishing to have such a meeting held at their place, please correspond with J. R. Boynton, Plymouth, Mass., or with me at Pittsfield, N. H., between the second and third Sundays of Dec. A. D.

R. I. and East. Conn.

The R. I. and East Ct. Conference will hold its thirteenth annual session with the church at Rocky Brook, R. I., commencing Wednesday, Jan. 4th, at two o'clock P. M. Our preaching brethren are reminded that a resolution was passed at our last session requiring them to report at each annual meeting, either in person, or by letter. It is hoped that all will make a special effort to attend. All our churches are requested to send delegates. Where delegates are not chosen, it becomes the duty of the church clerk to send in a written report. Letters should be mailed the first of the week. Come at the commencement, and remain until the close. C. H. Sweet, Clerk.

Watch Meeting.

The Lord willing, there will be a Watch meeting at Southington, Ct., Saturday evening, Dec. 31st, and over Sunday Jan. 1st, 1871. Bro. H. L. Hastings is expected to preach the word, and may it be attended by the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. Come, brethren and sisters, praying for the divine power, to encourage the feeble-minded, strengthen the weak, convict the sinner, and confirm the hope of the little flock who love Jesus, and wait for his return from heaven.

O. D. Woodruff.

Minnesota Conference.

The ninth annual conference of the Advent Christian Church of Minnesota will convene at Winona, Friday morning, January 20th, 1871, at nine o'clock.

Special attention is called to the following, to facilitate the business sessions:

1. The officers of the different quarterly conferences will prepare written reports of business transacted in their respective districts the past year, together with an account of money raised by quarterly and church collections as provided in the constitution.

2. As it is desirable to make up the statistics of the conference at this session, each church is requested to report its present membership and the number added the past year.

3. Each church is entitled to one delegate for every eight members; and as business of special importance will be transacted, every church ought to be represented.

4. In case any of the preaching brethren are not able to be present, they are especially requested to report by letter.

There will be service on Thursday evening previous. Eld. P. Ramer and Bro. A. A. Gilbert will meet friends at the depot, and those coming with teams will call at their houses.

Edwin T. Himes, Sec'y.

It is expected that all churches, that feel an interest in the cause of Christ in this State, will send delegates, and that all who feel to co-operate with us in the work of God will attend. All are invited. Come, brethren; come, praying that peace and harmony may characterize our proceedings, and God be glorified.

"FOLLOW ME."

"Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps."—1 Peter 2: 21.

Dear pilgrim! when thy faith is like to fail,
Remember Him who lives within the veil;
'Tis one who trod thy thorny path before,
Who will not fail thee till thy toils are o'er;
Whose voice of love was heard in Galilee,
Who now is gently calling, Follow me!

Say, does the world its cunning lures employ,
To steal away thy higher hope and joy?
'Tis One who Satan's bribe remembers well,
Who oft was tried like thee, but never fell;
In all thy frailty who can feel for thee;
'Tis He who gently calleth, Follow me!

Say, does he bid thee bear and suffer long,
No wrong requite, though oft entreated wrong?
'Tis one who meek before his mockers stood,
Dumb as a lamb when brought to shed its blood;
Who bore a cross of agony for thee,
The Prince of peace who calleth, Follow me!

Say, does he bid thee humble, lowly be?
'Tis one who in a manger lay for thee; [crown,
Whose friends were fishermen, and thorns his
A reed his sceptre, and a cross his throne;
Who dwelt on earth to purchase heaven for thee,
'Tis He who gently calleth, Follow me!

Say, dost thou mourn some dear companion gone,
Or o'er some loved yet unbelieving one?
'Tis he who wept with Mary at the grave,
'Tis he who wept for souls he came to save;
Who when by thee forgot, remembered thee;
'Tis He who gently calleth, Follow me!

Believe, and fear not, O deserted soul!
When red with wrath the clouds around thee roll,
Thou hast an advocate before the throne,
Who trod the wine-press of that wrath alone;
Who was forsaken of his God for thee;
'Tis He who gently calleth, Follow me!

O weary pilgrim! faint not in the way,
The day shall break, the shadows flee away;
Still pitch thy tent a day's march nearer home,
Soon to the pleasant land thy feet shall come;
'Tis here thy cross, but there thy crown shall be,
With Him who now is calling, Follow me!

ANTIQUITY OF MAN.

Does the unwritten history of this race reach back to an antiquity incompatible with prevalent views upon the age of man? Here, as elsewhere, the enemies of Revelation have sought materials for the use of unbelievers. They have sought in vain. There is more in the history of primeval man that confirms our Scriptures, than there is of conflict with them. We have popularly held the race to be about six thousand years old; but our researches show that man lived with the bear, the hyena, mammoth, and other animals now extinct, and some of which became extinct on the decline of the glacial epoch. It is not claimed that man lived before the glacial epoch, and the evidences of his contemporaneous existence with the reign of ice have been shown to be fallacious. But it has been imagined that the close of the reign of ice dates back perhaps a hundred thousand years. There is no evidence of this. The cave of drift materials accumulated at the mouth of the Tiniere, in which have been found human remains, was estimated by Morlot to be from ninety-six to one hundred and forty-three thousand years old; but Dr. Andrews has exposed a curious mathematical blunder, the correction of which reduces the time to within five thousand years. We have no rule for the measurement of past tertiary time which necessitates the admission of so high antiquity to our race. If we have been accustomed to think of the cave-bear as dating back to high antiquity, we now discover that he lived with man, and the reindeer, and other animals which still survive. The existence even of the cave-bear may not have been so very remote.

What are the reasons assigned for the prevalent opinion that it was many years ago that the glaciers began to disappear from Europe? Simply the existence at that time of quadrupeds now extinct, together with the presumption, unsupported, as it seems, by the facts, that no animals have co-existed with man, except those of the recent fauna. The fact is that we came ourselves upon the earth in time to witness the retreat of the glaciers. They still linger in the valleys of the Alps, and along the northern shores of Europe and Asia, while the disappearance of animals once contemporaries of man is still continuing. Not only did contemporaries of man become extinct during the age of stone; some survived to the twelfth, fourteenth, and sixteenth centuries, as already stated: the Moa, of New Zealand, and the Æpiornis of Madagascar, have become extinct within the epoch of tradition, as indeed has the Mammoth, of North America: the Dodo, of Mauritius, disappeared in the seventeenth century; the Great Auk, of the Arctic regions, has not been seen for half a century, and every one must be convinced that the beaver, elk, panther, buffalo, and other quadrupeds of North America, are approaching extinction by perceptible steps.

The fact is, we are not so far out of the dust, and chaos, and barbarism of antiquity as we had supposed. The very beginnings of our race are still almost in sight. Geological events, which from the force of habit in considering geological events, which from the force of habit in considering geological events, we had imagined to be located far back in the history of things, are found to have transpired at our very doors. Our own race has witnessed the dissolution of those continental glaciers which we have so long talked of as incidents of pre-Adamic history. Our own race has witnessed the submergence of Southern Europe; the detachment of the British Islands and Scandinavia from the continent; the wanderings of the great rivers of Southern Asia; the submergence of thousands of square miles of the coast of China, so that the seats of ancient empires are now rocky islets far at sea; the drainage of the vast lake which once overspread the prairies of Illinois; and alterations of forests and many other events which were once associated with extreme antiquity. It is the opinion of Hooker and Gray that the Falkland Islands and others in the vicinity, have formed a part of the continent of South America during recent times, and that during this conversion they acquired the continental fauna and flora. The Straits of Behring may have been cut through since the early migrations of man and his contemporaries, the mammoth and reindeer. There is no more reason in this day than fifty years ago to claim a hundred thousand years for the past duration of our race.—Prof. Alex. Winchell.

Gotthold's Prayer.—Oh, God! I have no desire to be anything but what thou hast made me. I grudge not the great and mighty, what thou givest to them. Nay, I know not that I would exchange my poverty for their wealth, my solitude for their lofty rank. One thing, however, I implore; let me reign over the sin that dwells within me. Teach me to govern myself, and grant that I may one day be permitted humbly to enter that celestial city, welcomed by the holy angels, and wearing the crown of life.

THE "AURORA BOREALIS."

This very splendid phenomenon has just been seen in England. The "Aurora Borealis" is quite a novelty in the old country; and a leading daily paper—the Daily Telegraph, Oct. 28th, 1870—in a very able article makes the following remarks on the sight:—

Everybody was star-gazing on the nights of Monday and Tuesday last, and with reason, for such a sight as the heavens then presented is only witnessed three or four times in the course of a century—at least, in our latitudes. Scarcely had the dusk set in upon the evenings in question before the horizon to the N. E. and N. W. was lighted up with a strange mockery of twilight, which rapidly brightened into a canopy or wide triumphal arch of varied and brilliant colors. The prevailing hue of this strange though well-known illumination was roseate; and thinking, as most of us would be, of the sanguinary struggle now defacing Europe, it was easy to sympathize with those ancient seers who saw, in such "Northern Streamers" aerial engagements, "fierce, fiery warriors warring in the clouds," portents of "judgments coming upon the earth," or shadows of earthly quarrels cast in crimson upon the heavens. But the colors of this Aurora are described as being very greatly variegated. To name the tints, indeed, different observers run through the entire spectrum, and something more: there was steel blue and celandine green, grey, golden, and violet, rose, red, orange-red, and purple, and black, and white, besides the prevalent sanguinary dye. Metropolitan firemen, innocent of astronomical lore, took the apparition at once for the glow of a prodigious conflagration, and harnessed their engines. Simple rustics explained it to themselves as the effect of the bombardment of Paris; and even those who knew well what the unusual splendor was, and could give some explanation of it, were surprised to notice how marvellous are these "Lights," which the Esquimaux sees one night out of four during his dreary year, and even the Shetlander nearly half as often. To us in warmer latitudes the "Polar Dawn" is faintly visible upon twelve or thirteen nights of every twelve months; but such a display of Arctic glory as we all watched at the beginning of this week comes, as has been remarked, very seldom. Dr. Halley, one of the first careful observers upon the subject, lived to be an old man before he witnessed such a sight; and he remarks that no English philosopher ever described the portent, or even alluded to it, until 1707. Yet even in the north of Scotland the "merry dancers" are frequently present during the winter, and they are duly noted in old classic books under the name of chasmata, trabes and bolides.

Gassendus first christened the phenomenon Aurora Borealis in 1621, yet, though the name is both pretty and appropriate, he could not know that this flickering radiance is also seen at the South Pole. There, as at our end of the globe, a light in winter time plays round the foot of the planet; but, as observed by Captain Cook and by Weddell, it is invariably white, or at least whitish. The beams, flashes, and arches displayed here are also to be witnessed about that strange, desolate waste; but the "Austral Aurora" seems to be generally visible in the form of silvery columns bent at their upper extremities, and spreading over the southern sky. It will be highly interesting to ask navigators who happened to be south of Cape Horn on the 24th instant, whether the Antarctic region manifested any sympathy, positively or negatively, with this rare extension of the Auroral illumination into our temperate zone.

It comes upon us at a happy time for finding out some new facts about so mysterious a splendor. The attention of science is just now keenly directed towards the subjects of Light and Electricity; and, by means of the spectroscope, the polariscope, the electrician, and Professor Tyndall "on guard," it will be hard if the world does not learn something more than is known at present. The American cable flashes to us the fact that a brilliant Aurora was seen from Boston at the same date as that on which the phenomenon was visible in England. The coincidence opens the interesting problem of the height of these aerial fireworks above our earth. Do they dance and glitter—one mighty and continuous glow—in the far regions of ether; or are they earth-born and earth-clinging wisps of magnetic lustre, detached, and seen in many places at once by reason of identity of atmospherical and magnetical conditions, and not because there is one vast and bright display shining in a very distant portion of the sphere? Euler held that they were thousands of miles high; Dalton calculated the crown of the Auroral arch in 1826 as only one hundred miles away; but Richardson and Blot describe "Lights" which were palpably not higher than the cloud regions; and Parry, in his third voyage, witnessed a bright ray of the Aurora shoot out and downwards from the general illumination, and shine, like the limb of a rainbow, between the ship, and the land, which was about 3,000 yards distant. Evidence will be wanted upon this question: and another curious point is in regard to the noise declared to be heard in connection with the "Dancers." The Esquimaux, Crees, and Copper Indians unequivocally assert that the Aurora is accompanied by a whispering, hissing, or crackling sound. At Hammerfest they aver the same thing; and the Swedish Professor Hanstern has stoutly asserted his belief in the "quick, whispering" which the "Dancers" keep up. Did anybody hear this murmur of the mystic flashes here and across the Atlantic; or are the old whalers and Arctic discoverers, with the Esquimaux and the Cree Indians, taken in by the sounds which the snow and ice make? The question is partly answered by those who observed the display of the Aurora some thirty years ago in the North of England, and who perhaps heard the thrilling rush of the electric rays as they projected to the zenith; and the same fact has often been observed in Scotland. On the other hand, if the lightning has such a voice of its own, these "silent lightnings of the poles" may not be altogether "silent," although they flicker, as is thought, in regions where there are no clouds to roll the electrical crackle back to the earth.

But, although inquiry upon these points may lead to new knowledge, what is known already about the many colored streamers opens up boundless fields for speculation. In the details which we gave in our issue of Wednesday, it was stated how philosophy had already collected a long array of facts which may lead us soon to extraordinary conclusions. It has been demonstrated that the Auroral Light is magnetic in source, and that these displays coincide with marked perturbations of the earth's magnetic currents. Further, they seem to have a period of about eleven years, corresponding with the re-appearance of the thickest spots upon the surface of the sun, as well as with Jupiter's revolution in his orbit. There is, therefore, apparently, a mysterious law which links together the movement of the mighty planet, the spots on the sun, the disturbance of our magnets, the vagaries of our telegraph needles, and the brilliancy of that sight vouchsafed to us on Monday and Tuesday last. To the intellect which realizes what all this may mean, what it almost must mean, the war upon the Continent becomes a mere ripple in a pond, a little tempest in a teapot; and one can understand the Olympian calm of Goethe, who declined to be put out by the last historical fuss, on the ground that he was a poet and a philosopher. As for the Auroral Light itself, Dr. Tyndall manufactures blue sky at will in his glass cylinders; and the lovely purple and silver discharges of electric light seen in the Geisler vacuum tubes are probably identical in their nature with those boreal beams. But muse upon the apparent fact, that Jupiter, when whirling nearest to the Sun, suppresses the spots upon its face, and calms our earth's magnetic flutter; and that, when the planet is farthest off, as now, those spots multiply, and we are favored with electrical convulsions and unwonted auroral shows. These are hints at a solidarite—a partnership of influence, of action, and of reaction, among the members of our planetary family, from the centre to the boundary—which come home to the thought more clearly than Newton's abstruse law of attraction.

In Shetland, if the Aurora shines red—as it did here this week—the islanders used to say "God was angered;" and in 1716 Dr. Halley records that "the vulgar considered the sight as marking the introduction of a foreign race of Princes." As if Jupiter cared about the Hohenzollern dynasty or the sun concerned himself with the audacities of Bismarck! But that the deeper and grander fortunes of all visible worlds are governed by a sublime independence and close mutual relation, is really illustrated by these lines of splendor streaking the evening sky, and throbbing with the pulse of a force which is subtler than the light, more terrible than the battle. And, after all, the Aurora presents us with an omen bearing upon that sad spectacle of civilized war so near at hand. Looking at these displays of the vital forces of the universe, working in sublime harmony, is it possible to doubt that laws equally beneficent bear directly on human thoughts and actions, with a defined and intelligent purpose? That which appears like a pretty firework in the sky to our vision illustrates a far-reaching and beneficent law; and what seems a dreadful carnage to us may, to wiser sight, show itself as a necessary expiation, and a forward step for humanity, sad but salutary, from a condition of imperfect development to a nobler and happier existence.

Gems.

— The great moral victories and defeats of the world are often turned on five minutes. Men loiter, time flies, and all the great interests of life are speeding on with the sure and silent tread of destiny.

God's glory is a wondrous thing,
Most strange in all its ways;
And, of all things on earth, least like
What men agree to praise."

— There are men who can die patiently; but they are nobler yet, who can live with patience.

— It is not difficult to see how great results follow great beginnings. Every one understands that. But it is by no means easy always to trace the outgrowth of greatness from littleness.

— God calls men to special work. When the call is clearly understood and promptly obeyed, the man works with a zeal and directness utterly incomprehensible to the drone or the masses of "word and tongue" lovers of God.

— In many places the moral power of the pulpit is waning because of the pride taken into it.

— None talk so loudly of benevolence as those who subsist on it.

— All christians ought to be humble, but the minister of the gospel especially so.

Though sorrowful tears must fall,
And the heart to its depths be driven
With storm and tempest, we need them all
To render us meet for heaven.

— Read, not to contradict and confute, nor to believe and take for granted, nor to find talk and discourse, but to weigh and consider.

— It would be well if many professors of religion were aware that they are accountable not only for their time, but their tongues. The language of our Savior is, "By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."

Follow in thy Master's steps—
Tread the path he trod;
Ever, with untiring zeal,
Working what is good.

— One thing is clear to me, that no indulgence of passion destroys the spiritual nature so much as respectable selfishness.

— Regret not a golden age that is behind you. There is one before, and it beckons to you.

— Let a man feel in his soul that any particular sin is running any particular community, and he may preach until doomsday against everything else without accomplishing anything; whereas, if he risks the consequences and craves the sneering cry of hobby, he will see the salvation of God.

Not a star that shines above us,
But has labor to perform;
Not a flower whose beauties move us,
But inaction would deform.
Up, then, while the day is glowing,
Rested and refreshed anew;
Till to dust our form bestowing,
All is done that we can do.

WHAT CATHOLICS SAY.

Some of the Catholics still think that prosperous winds will soon blow again upon the Pope and the interests of the Roman Catholic church; but we think they will be doomed to perpetual disappointment.

The Morning Star and Catholic Messenger, a journal published in New Orleans, takes the following view of the present aspect of foreign affairs:—Ed.

"One week ago and Pius IX. stood before the world in the light of a dethroned monarch and prisoner. Even then Catholic faith foresaw that his trials would have end and that the triumph of his enemies would not be perpetual, but no one thought that light would commence to break upon the darkness so soon. Scarcely is the sacrilegious insolence of the Italian King consummated in the occupation of Rome, when the first thunder clap of an avenging storm breaks upon the guilty ear of Europe. A general war is imminent, and the very outbreak of such a war must reinstate the Holy Father in most of his possessions if not in all the States so wrongfully wrested from him of late years. Already the dispatches intimate that Prussia will intervene in his behalf, and if that power takes such a step her opponents will not dare to stay behind."

A correspondent of the Boston Pilot, writing from Rome, thus speaks of the present situation of the Holy See, and of the remedy proposed:

"The Pope is a prisoner! That is the beginning and the end of all the sorrow that now saddens the heart of Catholics throughout the world. That is the cause of the sinful and debased condition in which this Holy City is now found. Time after time the journals of Italy attempt to make their votaries believe that the Pope is free. All who are here in Rome, all who think of the state of affairs here, know how diabolically false in teaching, how given to lying, the Italian journals are. The infidel journals of Germany, and the almost infidel journals of England, re-echo the falsehoods of Italy, until over half the world a network of lies spreads its dangerous meshes. For us there is no higher earthly authority than the Holy Father himself. Had the Italian journals the slightest modicum of common sense they would see the futility of their opposition. Do one million Catholics accept their dictum as true? On the other hand there are two hundred millions—and over—who accept the word of the Pope, and who believe him rather than these nameless scribes. The forces are unequally matched, as it is to be hoped Italy may learn to her cost.

There is one thing only in which, after God, we Catholics can place our trust, in the presence of the tremendous outrage that has been done to us in the person of our Father, and in our Holy City—the home and possession of Catholics throughout the world. There is no possible appeal to be made to Italy through the justice of her generosity. These are, in her ears, but the sighing of the wind that has no meaning. Our bishops may protest, and the congregations may appeal to governments, and still Italy may hold her prisoner captive and spoil the property of Catholics beyond redemption. The suggestion that Italy will make terms with the European governments for the independence of the Sovereign Pontiff is only a means of baffling our hopes as Catholics. If we press our governments to act in the matter, it must be done with the unchangeable condition that the Pope shall be reinstated, that Italy shall undo her work, and give pledges for her future good behavior. Nothing short of that will be effective. In any other circumstance the Pope will be the slave of Italy, and indeed in most cases it will be the king who will be the actual ruler of the Christian world. We must have all or nothing. If the government do not act, then the last resource, the most effective of all, on account of the interests to which it appeals, must be tried—and that is force! There is no other means which can be tried that Italy will listen to; and that appeal is just, as the past has shown; and with the immense resources of numbers and wealth that Catholics possess, there is little fear for her success."

For the World's Crisis.

REPORT
Of the New York Chris. Conference, Dec. 1st to 4th, 1870.

The second quarterly meeting of this conference, for this year, was held with the A. C. Church in Honeoye, N. Y. The central and western portions of the State were well represented, and enjoyed the best of any meeting ever attended by the writer. In the absence of others, the opening discourse on Thursday evening was given by that worthy veteran in the cause, Vice President Cogswell, whose ever-readiness to stand in the gaps, speaks a christian desire to "guide the ship aright."

Friday, A. M. The first business meeting was called to order by the Vice President, and Bro. Warren Hobbs chosen Secretary pro tem. The subject of the Tent enterprise was discussed at some length. The following committee were appointed to prepare resolutions: B. C. Simonds, A. C. Newell, and W. J. Hobbs. Failing to make such connections as were expected, the President, Secretary, and others, arrived only in time for the P. M. meeting, when we listened to an earnest discourse from Bro. W. E. White, of the Chris. Conf. Text, Dan. 12: 4. After which a business meeting was held, the President in the chair. The regular order was suspended, and the subject of circuit preaching made the special order of the hour, occupying the time to adjournment. At six o'clock came together for prayer and social meeting. Quite a large number of brethren and sisters zealous for the coming of Jesus were present, and we have seldom enjoyed so rich a feast; glorious seemed not too expressive an adjective for the occasion—our joy was full. While there was no undue excitement in prayer, song, or exhortation, there was such a calm and holy trust in God manifested; such an abiding purpose to serve him; such a willingness to testify of his goodness; such a love for Jesus and his coming, and for one another,—oh! it was an earnest worthy of that presence that caused apostolic hearts to "burn within"; whose words (and they are "written") are, "Lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world."

Preaching services throughout the session were preceded by meetings of this character; all excellent, and perhaps as highly interesting and profitable to others, as this first to the Secretary; but space cannot be taken to report further. We can only wish the world en masse could have beheld our joy. After this meeting Bro. W. A. Fenn preached from the words of the angels: "Come, see the place where the Lord lay."

Saturday, A. M. Business meeting opened at nine o'clock. Prayer by Bro. M R. Miles. Song—

"In expectation sweet."

That the expenses not met by the churches visited voluntarily, if presented to the treasurer next session, shall be paid from the conference treasury. (4.) That the Board of Trustees be authorized and requested to sell the old "mission tent" before the next quarterly meeting. (5.) That the above visiting committee be instructed to see to the appointment of an efficient person in each place visited to solicit and hold funds for the purchase of a new State Mission Tent (to be put into the field early the coming season, if time permit), said funds to be sent by delegate or otherwise to conference at the next session. Adjourned till after afternoon services.

2 o'clock P. M. Prayer by Bro. Warren Vreeland. Song,

"'Tis the very same Jesus."

Sermon by Bro. A. C. Newell, from 1 Cor. 15: 12-15. Bro. N. had a good audience, and we a good discourse; after which in business session several invitations for conferences were urged, and thus decided: Next quarterly meeting to be held with the A. C. Church in Brockport, Bro. J. H. Whitmore being requested to make the opening address; the next annual meeting assigned to East Shelby, Orleans Co., early in June.

Treasurer's Report: [This not having been passed to the Secretary's table at the time, was forgotten, and is given from memory.] Paid D. Cogswell, for tracts for mission tent, $14. Paid B. P. Stevens for tracts for "The Lord's Tent," $20. On hand, $30. Received today from delegates, $61.06. Total, $91.06.

Evening. After a spirited social meeting, a large and attentive audience listened to Bro. J. H. Whitmore, discoursing from Luke 23: 42-43, and taking a glance in closing at the perplexed condition of the nations.

Sunday, A. M. At nine o'clock enjoyed a very excellent season at love-feast. Prayer by Bro. Hobbs; sermon by Bro. Fenn, from 1 John 5: 9-11. Bro. Warren Vreeland was then formally introduced and recommended for ordination, which ceremony was proceeded with in the usual manner. Prayer by Bro. Cogswell; Charge by Bro. Fenn; Right hand of Fellowship by Bro. Whitmore.

2 oclock P. M. After prayer by Bro. C. P. Greenman, Bro. B. P. Stevens gave a timely discourse upon this interesting symbolic prophecy: "The beast that thou sawest was, and is not; and shall ascend out of THE bottomless pit, and go into perdition." [But for burdening the report, the Secretary would like to note, in order, the points made. And yet another consideration, that all would not endorse the inevitable results of the "summing up"; a proper deference to their feelings makes it a pleasure even to forego a pleasure. He ventures a prayer, however, for the "Spirit" and for "truth"—O Lord, give them us.]

Evening. At an early hour another large congregation assembled and enjoyed the hour which was well filled up with earnest prayers, stirring exhortations, cheering songs, and simple, loving testimonies for Jesus. It is hardly possible but that many left that hall firmly resolved to be better men and women; more consecrated to God; better scholars in his school; more conversant with his word; more godly, watchful, prayerful, patient; more worthy of Jesus' "well done." Then after prayer by Bro. Wm. Ingmire, Bro. M. R. Miles gave a touching discourse from the text—"As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be," etc. The Lord's Supper was then celebrated, and a large number united to "show forth the Lord's death till he come."

At the close of the afternoon service, Bro. E. Barron stated his convictions of duty, and received, by vote, an unordained minister's license, and recommendations to the church. Bro. E. A. Rowe received certificate and recommendation as colporteur, and Bro. Warren Vreeland certificate of ordination. A vote of thanks was tendered the good friends of Honeoye for kind entertainment. Adjourned to meet (D. V.) in Brockport, Thursday evening, March 2nd, 1870.

It is evident the prospects of the cause we love and represent were never brighter in this State. Brn., encourage your Visiting Committee.

NEW YORK STATE.

To the saints scattered abroad, greeting:—I am happy to tell you that a very important step was taken at our last conference, the object of which is to improve the condition of those places where it has not been practicable heretofore to sustain preaching. We desire to establish a practical system of circuit preaching, so that isolated and weak churches may enjoy the privileges of the gospel at regularly appointed periods.

To prepare the way for the establishment of this system, a committee of three was appointed to canvass the State as far as practicable. The object of this article is, to inform churches and isolated brethren and sisters, that this committee desire to hear from every place where a live Adventist lives, at once; telling them the condition of the cause, and the desire of its friends relative to preaching among them.

A division of territory has been assigned this committee as follows:

The territory west of Rochester, on the line of, and adjacent to, the various branches of the N. Y. Central R. R., was assigned to Bro. James H. Whitmore, with whom the brethren in this territory will communicate their wishes relative to the above project at once.

The territory on the line of, and adjacent to, the Genesee Valley R. R. and southern branch of the N. Y. Central, as far east as Syracuse; thence south on the Binghampton and Syracuse R. R., as far as Binghampton; thence west, on the N. Y. and Erie R. R., as far as Corning, where the Genesee Valley R. R. intersects; and all the territory lying within this square, bounded by these railroads, was assigned to Bro. Wm. Fenn, with whom the brethren in this territory will communicate their wishes with regard to said enterprise.

The territory on the line of, and adjacent to, the northern branch of the N. Y. Central R. R., east of Rochester as far as Rome, then north and east as far as Jefferson and Lewis counties, including all the territory east from Lake Ontario to the Black River R. R., and south of Lake Ontario to the N. Y. Central R. R., which lies between Rochester and Rome, was assigned to Bro. M. R. Miles, to whom brethren living in this territory will send their communications.

This committee desire to visit, as far as possible, every place in their respective territories, before the next quarterly conference. It will be necessary for those wishing to see them, to give them directions as to the best way to get to them, etc.

Bro. James H. Whitmore's address is East Shelby, Orleans Co., N. Y. Bro. Wm. A. Fenn's, Rochester, N. Y. Bro. M. R. Miles', Wolcott, Wayne Co., N. Y.

The character of this canvassing and visiting will be, to come among you for a day or two, and counsel and advise with you, and preach if circumstances admit. We wish to ascertain who want preaching, and what they can do to sustain it; then we can determine at our next quarterly conference what we can do towards adjusting a system of circuit preaching.

Do not read this and then forget it, but prayerfully consider it, and write to this committee, as directed, at once. They have a great work to do in this matter, and the sooner they hear from the brethren in their territories, the sooner they can go to work.

The Lord is at the door! are you ready to welcome him? Let us all bestir ourselves in the Master's service, and do all we can at once. This is a move in the right direction, and a hearty co-operation is desired and expected from all. Will the Master say "Well done" for what we have done, unless we do more? In behalf of the committee,

Wm. A. Fenn.

WORKING FOR GOD.

I would not have the restless will
That hurries to and fro,
Seeking for some good thing to do,
Or secret thing to know;
I would be treated as a child,
And guided where to go.

Wherever in the world I am,
In whatsoever state,
I have a fellowship with hearts
To keep and cultivate;
And a work of lowly love to do
For the Lord on whom I wait.

For the World's Crisis.

"HONOR TO WHOM HONOR."

As I pass through the country, some questions are asked me that lead one to "smell rat" about arrangements in the Crisis office, about honesty and promptness. I feel it due to every class of my brethren, to not allow a misrepresentation, or a sly slur, to pass without reproof. I have had a fair chance to know about the arrangements of the Crisis office; and, as far as honesty and promptness are concerned, all hands are without rebuke. There is no just reason to find fault. Let those that find fault take their places one year, and they would sing alto. All the improvement I can see for the better is, Bro. Moore's health, which is not sufficient for the task at present. It is a hard matter to hitch a team together that will work as well and harmoniously as this for the good of the paper. Most of them are women, fully competent for their positions when the Editor is gone. If the brethren were not satisfied, they could not better themselves if they should get some one else. Those are the wisest that know the most and best about that of which they are speaking.

Now, brethren, pray for your servants (for they are nothing else), working more hours than the average hours for the same pay, and are blamed at that, by those who are never satisfied. You would not like to work hard all day, and have a dozen letters a week, finding fault, and from those you knew did not know anything about what they were talking, which is true in the above cases.

I feel it duty to say thus much, for I court the friendship of no one at the expense of truth.

PLEDGE OF THE TRY COMPANY.

We, the Undersigned, hereby pledge ourselves to abstain from Tea, Coffee, Tobacco, and all Intoxicating Drinks as a Beverage.

Touch the goblet no more!
It will make thy heart sore
To its very core!
Its perfume is the breath
Of the angel of death,
And the light that within it lies
Is the flash of his evil eyes.
Beware! O, beware!
For sickness, sorrow and care
All are there!

HE COULD BE TRUSTED.

Alfred was missing one night about sunset. Mother was getting anxious, for she always wished him to be home early. A neighbor, coming in, said a number of boys had gone to the river to swim, and he thought Alfred was safe enough to be with them.

"No," said the mother, "he promised me he would not go there without my leave, and he always keeps his word. He never told me a lie."

But seven o'clock came, then eight, and mother was still watching and listening for the step of Alfred; but it was half-past eight before his merry shout and whistle were heard, when he ran into the gate.

"Confess, now," said the neighbor, "that you have been to the river with the other boys, and so kept away till late."

How the boy's eye flashed, and the crimson mounted to his cheeks!

"No, sir! I told my mother I would never go there without her leave, and do you think I would tell a lie? I helped James to find the cows which had strayed in the wood, and did not think I should be so late."

James, coming up the street just then, came in to tell us "he was afraid we had been alarmed; they had been so far in the wood it made them late in getting home."

The neighbor, turning to the mother as he took his hat to go home, said, "I think there is comfort in store for you, madam. Such a boy as that will make a noble man."

DEW DROPS.

The dew drops on the grass,
Stay but their little hour—
Soon from our sight they pass;
But leaf and opening flower
Have greener, brighter grown,
For every vanished bead,
Each glistening, short-lived drop,
Hath filled some pressing need.

Some little, growing bud,
Some reddening berry's core,
Some drooping blade or leaf
The sun had smitten sore,
Hath felt the gentle touch
Which strength or healing brought,
So that no tiniest drop
Hath ever been for naught.

Each little word we speak,
Each little deed we do,
If but the heart be pure,
Hath mission just as true.
Be words sincere and kind,
Be deeds without a stain,
Then word and deed and life
Shall not have been in vain.

"WHERE DOES JESUS LIVE?"

To many people, the Savior is very far off—too far, indeed, to bless or help, or save in time of need. Others have a different experience, an experience of Christ with them and Christ in them.

"Where does Jesus live?" asked a missionary once, in a mission-school.

"Please, sir, he lives in our alley now," said a little boy who had lately found the Savior.

Such an experience as this is sweet. To have Christ dwelling, not only in heavenly glory afar off, but also in our streets, in our alleys, in our homes, and in our hearts—this makes this dreary world look bright, and the world to come look brighter still.

"While blest with a sense of his love,
A palace a toy would appear;
And prisons would palaces prove,
If Jesus would dwell with me there."

—Methodist.

LOOK WELL TO YOUR FOOTING.

A man was passing along a high road one day, when he saw a boy standing on the edge of a chalk-pit which was being worked at the time.

"Look well to your footing, my lad!" he cried; for he thought it not unlikely that the bank might give way.

The boy, thinking he was safe enough, paid no heed to the kind warning. He did not care to move, but stood gazing idly before him. Suddenly the edge fell in with a terrible crash. Down he went headlong, and was buried in the rubbish. Help was at hand, and the men worked hard to dig him out; but twenty minutes elapsed before they could reach him; and, when at last they succeeded, it was too late. Smothered in the debris, the boy had lost his life because he would not heed the warning, "Look well to your footing!"—Child's Sower.

"Every Bit of it."—One evening, at a prayer-meeting, many newly converted persons, both old and young, arose to tell what God had done for their souls, and their determination to love and serve him. Among the rest, a little girl about seven years old jumped up, her face beaming with happiness, and, straining her childish voice to speak as loud as she could, she said, "I have given my heart to Jesus, every bit of it."

"This is for your health."—Paul.

THEN AND NOW.

A correspondent of the Herald of Health for Dec., thus gives some items of experience relating to the eating of meat:—

EXPERIENCE OF A FORMER MEAT-EATER.

"I have been living for two years a strict vegetarian. I have not even tasted meat. Once, I remember, after I had been living in this way six months, I tasted meat gravy, and afterward ate a hearty dinner, but had barely finished the meal when I threw all up again. I never tried it again. When I changed my style of life, I was in a declining state of health, was troubled with canker in the mouth, and scrofula, nervousness, etc.; could barely lift one hundred and fifty pounds, and got tired very quickly. Now, I am a strong, hearty fellow, eating my two meals a day of fruit and vegetables, and apparently free from any sort of disease whatever. I can lift three hundred and fifty pounds with ease, and stand as much exertion as any one of my size. I shall never eat meat or flesh again, unless forced to, as I think flesh food, eggs, strong drink, and white-flour bread, the curse of the world. I was a thin, spare fellow, but am now becoming a heavy, solid man . . . I am confident that nine-tenths of the world do not know the benefits to be derived from living in this way."

CATCHING COLD.

Catching cold is a common phrase for an attack of catarrh, but it is a very incorrect one. One year I suffered so severely from a series of "colds" that my attention was drawn specially to them. I was then a lecturer on medicine, and nearly every night, from five o'clock to six, during the winter months, had to turn out from a warm room to go through all weathers, lecture for an hour in a theatre heated by a stove and lighted by gas, and then return again to my snuggery at home. When I felt a fresh cold beginning I tried in vain to account for it, until I accidentally saw in Copeland's dictionary that the most fertile cause of a cold was coming from a moist cold air to a hot and dry room. This at once explained to me the reason of my frequent suffering, for I had invariably gone into my hot room straight from the cold. I of course changed my habit. I dawdled in the hall while taking off my great coat, perambulated the rooms which had no fire in them, went up and down stairs, and the like, ere I went into my study, whose temperature was always reduced. Since then I agree with a friend, who says "that a cold comes from catching hot;" and I am disposed to think that there is a strong analogy between a chilblain on a child's toes and cold in a person's nose, throat and lungs.—Medical Mirror.

The process of frying so much of our food is not only injurious to health, but expensive to the purse. The usual custom is to fry almost everything we eat. By thus cooking meats we deprive them of a large portion of their nutriment, while, at the same time, we combine them with a great amount of grease, which is very indigestible and pernicious. There is scarcely anything more indigestible than fat. Indeed, experiments have shown that this substance is not digested by the stomach at all; and the best supposition in reference to it is that it is taken care of by the pancreas.

To Produce a Pound of Flesh.—An English chemist has been experimenting for the purpose of ascertaining how much of various kinds of food must be eaten in order to make one pound of flesh. He comes to the conclusion that it requires twenty-five pounds of milk, one hundred of turnips, fifty of potatoes, fifty of carrots, nine of oat-meal, seven and a half of barley-meal, and three and a half of peas or beans.

Recipe for the Sick Room.—Take a large handful of rosemary, wormwood, lavender, rue, sage and mint, each. Place in a stone jar, and pour over it a gallon of strong cider-vinegar; cover closely, and keep near the fire for four days. Then strain and add an ounce of powdered camphor gum. Bottle and keep tightly corked. It cools the head. Wash the face and hands with it before going into a sick room.

Never enter a sick-room in a state of perspiration, as the moment you become cool your pores absorb. Do not approach contagious diseases with an empty stomach, nor sit between the sick and the fire, because the heat attracts the vapor. Preventives are preferable to pill or powder.

Apples, if eaten at breakfast, with coarse bread and butter, without meat or flesh, remove constipation, correct acidities, and cool off ferbrile conditions more effectually than the most approved medicines.

☞ A wise physician once said, "I observe that every one wishes to go to heaven, but I observe also that most people are willing to take a great deal of very disagreeable medicine first."

COMING.

"I daily long for his appearing, and frequently look up, as I sit by the window, toward the eastern sky, hoping to see the King in his beauty."
—Extract from a letter.

I sit by my window and listen,
While the mists of the morning go by,
That I may catch the first sound of His coming,
May meet the bright glance of his eye;
And day after day as the noon-tide
Is marked on the sill of the door,
While the tired men rest in the shadows,
And the sunlight plays on the floor;

I list for the sound of his chariot,
I wait for the light of his smile,
For the coming in glory of Him
Who tarrieth the "little while."
I sit on the door-step at evening—
A maiden is singing below,
I hear the sweet laughter of children,
And the rivulet's musical flow.

The night-birds are trilling the chorus
Of all the glad songs of the day,
And mingled with these are the voices
Of villagers far away;
But deep through the beautiful gloaming
My eyes are gazing afar,
To catch the first glimpse of the rising
Of Bethlehem's magical star;

That star that shall herald the coming
Of Jesu—the hope of the world,—
Ah! none but the watchers will see it,
The watchers with banners unfurled!
So I watch at morn and at evening,
I question my heart all the day,
Will he come at midnight, or noon-tide?
And why does he longer delay?

Are the garments he gave me all stainless?
The lamp brightly trimmed in my room?
My hands busy clothing the needy,
Flinging joy's flying threads thro' my loom?
Shall I hear the low call of the Master?
Oh, visions of glory, go by!
The Bride is all spotless in beauty,
Unworthy, unworthy am I!

But onward the watchers are marching,
And closer the foemen they press,
Back, back to thy station and arm thee!
Near by are the mansions of rest!
Be no doubt in thy heart of the issue,
Keep close to thy duty and truth,
The blood of the Master hath bought thee,
With him is unchangeable youth.

Hid with him are the lives of his children,
Not the rack nor the flame can destroy;
No trials nor sorrows may move them,
They wait for Eternity's joy.
So I sit by my window and listen
While the mists of the morning go by,
That I may hear the low call of the Master,
May meet the bright glance of his eye.

THE ADVENT.

"O, ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?"—MATT. 16:3.

There are in the gospel of St. Matthew over fifty citations from the Old Testament showing that his chief work was to prove by the prophets and by the Lord himself that the Son of man should come again. When our Savior sent his apostles out to preach, his charge was, "And as ye go, preach saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand." Now if in those days so many centuries ago, when there remained so many prophecies to be fulfilled, it was essential to proclaim the soon coming of Christ, is it not now more necessary, and more binding upon those who are placed as under shepherds of God's people to herald him as even unto the doors? Indeed it seemeth so, yet there is not a subject more neglected by our modern teachers than this; certainly they are not worthy to be called watchers on the walls of Zion. The most of them seem to try to close their eyes to the fact that the revelations of God are being rapidly brought to an experimental reality; they purposely stop their ears to the mutterings and tremblings of our infirm mother earth; and by so doing are themselves a sign saying, . . "Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of creation"; they are willingly ignorant of this truth—"The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is long-suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." With such abundance of grace, should we not all come over to that ground occupied by the wise virgins? Let us not be of those who are wresting the Scriptures to their own destruction, trying to make the advent a purely spiritual affair, or teaching, as some do, that he comes at death, or every time a sinner is converted, all of which is foolishness. It is the duty of every one who has the true light on this matter to let it shine, though by so doing, in some circles he may be looked upon as fanatical and become unpopular. God help us to become true evangelists, even as John was saying—"Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

Though as was foretold by Isaiah, the sun has been darkened, the moon has refused to give her light, and the stars have fallen in glorious showers from the heavens, the powers of the earth, too, have been shaken; yet with all these signs thrust upon them, men have become so blinded that they do not comprehend the meaning of these things. We are now having wars and rumors of wars. . . but the end is not yet; for nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom, and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes in divers places." Iniquity shall abound, the love of many wax cold, false prophets arise, wicked men growing worse and worse, many departing from the truth to embrace the doctrines of devils, and harboring dangerous errors. "Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there, believe it not. For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect. Wherefore if they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert; go not forth; Behold, he is in the secret chambers; believe it not. For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."

With all these warnings and directions, we need not be mistaken. We may now expect the sign of the Son of man in heaven at any time, for the indications are, that this generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled. "And then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, but the faithful few will be rejoiced, knowing that their redemption draweth nigh. The day and the hour we know not; nevertheless, by these infallible signs we are sure the great day of wrath is not far off, "when the heavens shall part as a scroll, and the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bond man, and every free man, shall hide themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and say to the rocks and mountains, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb." This is a faithful picture of the destruction of this universe, "in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with a fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up." Knowing these things draw near, let us obey the injunction, "Take heed, watch and pray; for ye know not when the time is."

But Jesus did not wish to lead us to believe that we should be in total darkness as to the time, for he has said—"Ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief." It behooves us to watch, for though we may not know "just when," we must not slide into the opposite extreme, thinking we know nothing at all of his return. "Be ye also ready"; "Blessed are they that watch." Then is promised our reward, and a home in the new earth. How thankful we should be that the evil days are to be shortened for the elect's sake. While waiting here, we should employ our talents, whether with pen or with tongue, to warn all men to flee to Christ, before it is too late, spreading the truth far and wide, doing all we can to destroy the traditions of men and the works of the devil.

Religion, deprived of this blessed hope, is robbed of its great essentials. O, then, let us not spend our time in vain wranglings and trifling side-issues. Help us, Lord, to lay aside all denominational dissensions, so that we may the better concentrate our strength in spreading the glad tidings of salvation and a speedy release from our present imperfect existence. Let us make one grand effort by centralizing our powers, bursting all sectarian cords that may hinder, paying no heed to the doctrines of men, taking the New Testament for our creed, with Jesus Christ for our leader; then, by God's help,

"Truth crushed to earth will rise again," and we shall be successful in at least stirring up some to prepare for the Bridegroom, and in banishing some of the heathen impurities which have been introduced by Plato and others. "Ye, therefore, beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness." We must be ever watchful, lest we be lured into the wiles of Satan, becoming entangled in the meshes of worldliness, or precipitating headlong into some pitfall of error. God grant that we may be kept pure and holy, not giving up our hope, but being ever on the lookout for our Master. Surely his coming is something which should be desired by all christians, for he has promised to bring his reward with him; then, too, shall all sin be banished, with its consequent troubles, tribulations, and all the evils brought upon us by Adam's fall. Is not this, then, a glorious hope? How natural for us to desire others to share it with us; for we know there cannot be that full, deep religious enjoyment without this "blessed hope" of the soon coming of the Lord. We are supported in this doctrine by all the apostles, the old reformers, and by many of the most active and devout christians of the present day. Luther, Baxter, and a host of others made this a common theme; so should we. Let us strive to be ready for him, and do all that we can to awaken sleeping christians, and arouse those who have fallen into a lethargy of sin, seemingly dead to all good things.

O sinner! hasten now to the Savior, for soon the last ransomed sinner shall be caught up to meet the Bridegroom, then it will be too late for you. Will you not come now, and prepare for the awful time that is fast hastening upon us? The present only is yours. O improve it; no longer spurn Jesus and his merciful provisions for your salvation from you, but accept him as your all and in all. Come with all your sins; trust his love, and join with us of whom it is said, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." This is one of the many promises we have; will you not also be a claimant of them?

God help you and us all to realize that time is short; and may we all meet at his right hand; then shall we become "immortal souls" through Christ.

"Our glad hosannas, Prince of peace,
Thy welcome shall proclaim,
And heaven's eternal arches ring
With thy beloved name."

For the World's Crisis.

WHERE ARE WE?

The four great prophetic empires of the earth have arisen, have fulfilled their long, bloody history, and passed away. Babylon, Persia, Greece and Rome, are kingdoms that were, but are not. The last of these empires has been broken into fragmentary divisions, many centuries ago. Among the "ten" principal kingdoms of the shattered and divided empire of the "western division" has appeared the prophetic, blasphemous kingdom of the Popes, which has ruled the world in tyranny, and made "war" upon the saints of God for the period of "1260 days," or years. The present century and generation has witnessed the decay, and now the "loss of the temporal dominion," and hence the remarkable fulfillment of the Scripture, "They shall take away his dominion, to consume and destroy it unto the end." So that now, at this hour, all that remains of the dominion of the Pope is "a petit principality of the government of so much of the city of Rome as is covered by the castle St. Angelo, St. Peter's, and the Vatican"! And Marmon, in the command at Rome, in issuing his proclamation, said: "The plebiscitum now crowns the national edifice. He hopes and believes the Pope, as the head of the people, will be recognized by them as such."

Where are we? The end is near! It is come, indeed! The Lord Jesus will soon appear in the heavens, where he displays the aurora so resplendently as a token of "the day dawn." His blessed feet will "stand upon the earth" groaning for deliverance; and the sleepers in their graves, and sepulchres, and the dust of the earth, and from the coal reefs and depths of the seas, shall awake at his voice, as did Lazarus; and his kingdom in reality and in glory appear, with the saints enthroned at "his right hand."

Ye waiting saints, keep ready for the glorious Coming One! Ye weary ones, almost fainting for the long delay of your Lord, "lift up your heads; your redemption draweth nigh." "Know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." "Even so, come, Lord Jesus." "Make haste, my Beloved, and be thou like to a roe, or to a young hart, upon the mountains of spices."

O. R. FASSETT.

"FOR THE PEOPLE HAD A MIND TO WORK."

In the above declaration of "holy writ," we find "a mind to work" assigned as the secret of successful prosecutions of a great undertaking, and one attended with much opposition and many difficulties; namely, the rebuilding of the walls of "Jerusalem."

When the practical determination of the Jews to rebuild the devastated walls of their city became known, all of the pre-existing animosities of the Samaritans were at once aroused, and a conspiracy formed to defeat, if possible, the efforts of "Nehemiah" and his coadjutors. The project, however, of this humble servant of God, had not been formed without premeditation and prayer, or its prosecution entered upon without a clear assurance of the divine approbation; hence, he was not to be diverted from the accomplishment of his purpose by any machinations of his enemies, but in the happy consciousness of the integrity of his cause; and under the inspiration of an unwavering trust in his God, he went forward to an ultimate triumph.

But, however just and righteous the great work in which he engaged, or however desirous and determined he was to see it effected, he could not do so unaided, or without the united co-operation of those who felt a like interest in the cause, and that he had the requisite assistance for success, under the divine blessing, as he assures us in the following language: "So we built the wall; and all the wall was joined together with the half thereof, for the people had a mind to work."

Now, the course pursued by those who were actively engaged in this great work is highly instructive. Their enemies were earnest in their endeavors to impede, as far as possible, its progress; and nothing would have given them greater pleasure than to have witnessed its complete subversion. But it was destined to triumph, and its successful prosecution was unquestionably the result of the practical recognition of several important principles. There was evidently in the minds of all a definite purpose and personal interest in the work. A unity of desire to see it go on, also in the expediency of the plan through which it was to be accomplished, developed a concentration of effort, the natural result of which was final success.

Another noticeable feature of the work was, that each had a definite portion assigned him to do, and each stood in his lot and place, and faithfully performed his respective duties. And thus must it be with the membership of every christian church, in order that it may become that effective source of moral power, as a church organization, which God designed that it should be. Each member has its own specific work to do, and that he may do it well, he must be found in his place, with "a mind to work," looking unto Him for all needful wisdom, who "giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not."

It is the want of "a mind to work" on the part of so large a proportion of professing christians, that we find so many spiritually barren wastes in our land. The church must, in order to accomplish its good work, be united in its effort. Whenever we find a church in which discord exists among its members, there we find a church which is comparatively weak. But when we find any Christian organization in which peace, harmony, and a unity of action exist; one in which not a few, but all have "a mind to work," then we find a vigorous and efficient instrumentality in the cause of our blessed Redeemer. The pastor of such a church is not held responsible by its members, for the accomplishment of all the work; but enjoys the hearty co-operation of his people, which is a greater encouragement to him in the discharge of his ministerial duties, than any pecuniary aid which they could give him without their sympathy and labors.

There never was a time in which the development of a united working spirit, among God's people, was more earnestly demanded than the present. Satan and his emissaries are earnestly endeavoring, by their combined forces, to subvert the truth, and to make obsolete the great fundamental principles which underlie our religious superstructure. Infidelity, in a variety of specious forms, is rearing its hydra-head in every direction, from which goes out a pernicious influence upon all on whom it is brought to bear, and this must be carefully guarded against.

May God grant us such a baptism by the Holy Spirit, that we can no longer sit at ease in Zion and see the cause of our blessed Redeemer languishing for the want of laborers; but at once unite with his faithful co-workers, for the salvation of souls, and the advancement of his cause.—Herald of Truth.

OUR JOY AND CROWN.

"I will come again, and receive you unto myself." JOHN 14:3.

In the record of the doings and sayings of Jesus, we find many precious promises left for the encouragement and comfort of God's waiting people; and among them all none is more cheering and encouraging than the one quoted at the head of this article. It cheers the heart of the poor pilgrim as he is making his way through this vale of tears, this wilderness of wo. It comforts the hearts of the sorrowing ones as friend after friend is borne away to his last earthly resting-place.

He is coming to destroy the enemy and bring back those that sleep in him. He is coming to reward his faithful ones, and punish his enemies; to give everlasting joy and peace to his waiting church in glory. He is coming to remove the curse, and fit up the earth for the saints' abode; to receive his people to himself, and to crown them with eternal life; and they shall dwell with him forever.

Lift up your heads, ye sorrowing ones; the final conflict will soon be over. We shall grapple with sorrow, pain and sickness for the last time, and come off conquerors over death and the grave. He is coming to end all of our trials, and the warfare with sin and Satan will be over.

The signs that bespeak his near approach are thickening, and soon we shall see the Son of man coming with power and great glory, and all his holy angels with him. The storm of wrath that awaits a wicked world is gathering, and soon will burst with all its fury. And who shall be able to stand in that day? Only those that have sought a refuge in Jesus. In him only can we find a shelter from the impending storm. There is safety only in him.

Dear pilgrim, lonely, and often sad at the wickedness of earth, the warfare will soon end; the promise will soon be fulfilled, when Jesus will come and take us to dwell with him in his kingdom, to enjoy the pleasures he has in store for us. Be patient a little while longer; labor on a few days; then our labors will end, and we shall enjoy the fruits of them.

ENTHUSIASM FOR CHRIST.

Paul tells us that it is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing. There is a grand truth stated in these words.

1. "It is good to be zealously affected in a good thing," as distinguished from a bad, for zeal is defined as a "passionate ardor in the pursuit of anything, whether good or bad."

2. It is good to be always so. Only be sure that the object of pursuit is a laudible one. Then let your soul be "zealously affected" in it, and let it give forth a constant, steady flame of devotion—not a flickering or fitful light.

Many are zealous in a good thing now and then; they give themselves up to it, "heart and soul," on special occasions; and, anon, they falter and grow weary in the pursuit—because they do not see the results they had anticipated.

Why is it good to be thus affected?

1. Because nothing is worth doing at all but that which is good in its influence, either upon ourselves or upon others.

2. Because whatever is good deserves our best efforts, our most earnest endeavors.

3. Because nothing can be done thus earnestly and thoroughly unless we are zealous in its pursuit.

4. Because only those who keep their hearts always full of zeal in the good cause begin to accomplish the great life-work which the Master has set them to do.

Brethren, we all need more faith—a deeper conviction of "eternal truth." Having this, we shall love our Savior more fervently, and the souls for whom he gave himself a willing sacrifice upon the cross. This, in turn, will produce within us a glowing zeal for his cause; and zeal carried to its legitimate development will kindle enthusiasm.

Oh! for more of that enthusiasm in the service of Christ which impelled the great Apostle to the Gentiles to travel over land and sea, through perils of every kind, that he might lead dying sinners to Jesus.

When the church universal gets filled with this spirit, it will not be long before the whole world shall be vocal with the praises of Emmanuel—"God with us."—Christian at Work.

For the World's Crisis.

TWICE AS MUCH PRAYING.

Are you a christian? More, are you a married christian? Have you entered into the holy bond of matrimony? If so, I have a little I want to say to you. Will you listen? God says, "They two shall be one flesh."—Gen. 2:24; Eph. 5:31. Consider well that point. One in interests, one in joys, one in sorrows; and, as far as possible, one in understanding. Secretiveness should have no place between you. Are you both christians? Then you both have an unerring guide to direct you in all the duties and obligations of your little domicil. Sure we ought to thank God he did not forget that matter, and if we go to the Bible to teach us our duties to God and our obligations to our neighbors, shall we not go there to learn how we should act in the domestic department?

"First show piety at home," says the apostle. That work begins on self, but must extend its influence to the companion, if oneness is maintained. Does the christian pray to God that he or she may have grace all the way through, and a home in the kingdom at last, will not this petition embrace the companion also, if they are one? Does the wife or husband look into his or her heart to see if pride is subdued, covetousness rooted out; anger, hatred, revenge, lust, in short, all the fruits of the flesh kept under, and have no anxiety about the "other half"? Can oneness be maintained in this way? If the effectual, fervent prayer of the righteous availeth much, shall not we rather make use of it, not only to get and keep ourselves right, but also to check evil propensities in those with whom we are so closely united? What if we must needs to supplicate the Father twice as much as we would for ourselves; will not the sweet peace and oneness pay as we pass along, besides, perhaps, saving a soul from death and covering a multitude of sins? Neither should we give up by discouragements, for so we are not instructed. Jacob's name was changed to Israel, because he would not give up until he had got the blessing. As a prince had he power with God and with men, and did prevail. See Gen. 32:28.

Christ taught his disciples that they "ought always to pray and not to faint"; and refers us to the unjust judge for instruction. He was afraid of getting weary by the woman's continuing to come so long and so often, and so did avenge her to get rid of her.

Again, the apostle Paul, in writing to the Ephesians, says, "Pray always, with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints." No giving up in the matter, but, like Abraham, hoping against hope even, if we must.

Other scripture might be produced on this point, but I leave it for those to investigate who feel interested, and wish to profit by it.

(From the Rutland Independent.)

"SCRIPTURE MERIT."

It is especially gratifying to the followers of God, while infidel erudition would throw contempt upon the revealed word of God, to have the weight of the scientific thrown into their side of the scale. It seems to oblige skepticism to partially abate its invectives.

Benjamin Franklin is a name familiar to the scientific world, on both sides of the Atlantic, and in the palmy days of his scientific research he was a great favorite among the nobility of infidel France.

At a time when these French lords and nobles had a convivial gathering, Franklin was one of the honored guests. After the gorgeous repast had been served, the conversation turned upon the literary demerit of the Bible, and the folly of adhering to its antiquated laws. Innuendos, satire and sarcasm were freely dealt out by nearly all present.

At a little pause in the conversation, one lord raised his voice, evidently intending to be heard by all present, saying, "it was astonishing that any, who laid any claim to literary merit, could give credence to so vulgar a production as that Book."

Franklin observed profound silence while this opprobious shower fell upon the sacred volume. The taciturnity of so distinguished a guest, could not escape their notice, and one distinguished lord addressed him personally, asking his opinion. The shrewd philosopher manifested much sang froid, remarking that his mind was so absorbed with the contents of an old volume he had found, he could hardly think of much else at present.

This statement immediately elicited much inquiry among the company as to what could absorb so great a mind; whereupon this deep thinking sage replied he would if they desired, read from it some portions which struck him as possessing great literary and poetical merit. All were instant in signifying an affirmative desire, and immediately drew themselves up in most respectful attitude to listen to what might be a transcript of a noble mind.

He read from that lofty strain of Habbakuk thus:

"God came from Teman, and the Holy One from Mount Paran. Selah. His glory covered the heavens, and the earth was full of his praise. And his brightness was as the light; he had horns coming out of his hand; and there was the hiding of his power. Before him went the pestilence, and burning coals went forth at his feet. He stood and measured the earth; he beheld, and drove asunder the nations; and the everlasting mountains were scattered, the perpetual hills did bow; his ways are everlasting. . . . The mountains saw thee, and they trembled: the overflowing of the water passed by: the deep uttered his voice, and lifted up his hands on high. The sun and moon stood still in their habitation: at the light of thine arrows they went, and at the shining of thy glittering spear."

As he paused the highest train of adjectives were employed to express their admiration of the lofty, sublime and glowing sentiments thus portrayed. Finally they must know the author of his profound poem. Their astonished dismay may be better conceived than described, as they were apprised of the truth.

Persons who imagine the Scriptures to be void of sublimity, poetic beauty, and elegance of diction, should read this portion with many others found in Ps., Isa., Dan., and Rev., etc., and see if there be not many things to command their admiration. But be it remembered, the Bible was not given to teach science, though it incidentally alludes to it; just glancing for a moment, then rapidly returning to its main and master theme.

THE WAY TO BE SAVED.

If we were in imminent danger of perishing by flame and one informed us the sure way of escape, how long would we parley, relative to the manner of communicating the necessary information, whether like a plebian or a noble, providing we understand it in time to escape the impending danger? But some will cark, and cavil, until doomed to eternal night. The Bible is an independent book, savoring of the spirit of its great Author, when he gave Moses his commission to lead Israel from bondage—tell them, said he, that "I AM hath sent you." The Bible imitates no other book, it copies none, it hardly alludes to any other. Our Savior in his sermons does not refer to any author except Moses and the prophets. John never refers to Plato, or Paul, or Demosthenes, so that it seems nearly as true of its later portions when books were plenty, as at its commencement when they were scarce. But we refer to Franklin again in order to introduce one more novel circumstance of his life proving his belief in the promise of God to raise the dead. He wrote his own epitaph many years previous to his death; being as eccentric as it is pertinent, it may be interesting to the readers of the "Independent" who have never seen it, or seeing have forgotten it.

"The body of Benjamin Franklin printer, (like the cover of an old book, its contents torn out, and stript of its lettering and gilding) lies here food for worms; yet the work itself shall not be lost, for it will (as he believed) appear once more in a new, and more beautiful edition, corrected and amended by the Author."

COME AND BE SAVED.

Dear reader, if you want to be saved, you are invited this day to come. I invite you boldly, because of the words which Christ the Savior of mankind has spoken. He says—"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28. Again, "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." John 6:37. Now if you are tired of your sins, and are heavy laden, I invite you to Jesus. I know not what you are, or what you may have been in time past; but I can say with confidence, Come to Christ by faith, and break off your sins by righteousness, and you shall have pardon. "Look unto me and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth." Isa. 45:22. Now if you want to come, I see nothing to hinder you from coming.

But there is something for you to do.

1. "Break off from your sins by righteousness, and your iniquities by showing mercy to the poor." Dan. 4:27. "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." 1 John 1:9. "In the very day that you seek him with all the heart, he will be found of you." Jer. 29:13.

2. We must comply with the conditions on which the promise was made. Christ says—"Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Rev. 22:14. Then leave the trifles of earth. Come away. Why will you linger and die? While mercy lingers, why will you dally with the vanities of earth, and neglect the preparation for that rich inheritance which you may obtain?

Reader, I am deeply anxious to bring your minds to the point of actual application to Christ. Many are conscious of their sins, and would like to be saved, but never go beyond this. They seem to remain in a state of wishing, wanting, and intending, but get no further. They say they hope at some time to get the benefit of it, but for want of sufficient determination they seem to fail to get any benefits whatever. If you are of this kind, you are in a dangerous state. You will certainly miss immortality and eternal life by remaining in this condition. Believe this, that there must be actual faith in Jesus Christ that he can save you to the uttermost, or else Christ died in vain so far as you are concerned. Read this carefully, and endeavor to understand it distinctly, and if you are the one to whom it applies, then act upon it with decision. Wait no longer for some better or more elevated position in life, nor for some imaginary frame of mind or feelings, which may never come. Hesitate no longer. Arise, and come to Christ, just as you are. This may the Lord help you to do.

H. S. MITCHELL.

— Every one's joys will actually be greater in proportion as he gets away from selfishness and becomes the god in his benevolence, that is, in his love.

DECLINING CHRISTIANS.

Declining christians have great reason to suspect themselves; and, if they quickly repent not, and do their first works with their first zeal and alacrity, they may sadly suspect that their graces are not true; for growth in grace is the best evidence of truth of grace. Indeed in young converts there may be a great deal of heat and fervor, which afterwards, when they are more established christians, may abate; and they may think this a decay in their graces, when indeed it is not. For we must distinguish between a passionate love of God, and a sedate, serene love of God. Our passions do, in our first conversion, mingle more with our graces than afterwards; and then we are like a torrent, very swift and rapid, but neither so deep nor so strong. And as little brooks and torrents, though they run very fiercely, yet stop and purl and murmur at every small pebble that lies in their way; but great rivers, which seem to move with a slow and grave pace, yet bear down all moles and dams, and whatsoever is in their way to oppose their passage; so it is here—grave and settled christians may seem to move more slowly, without any noise or tumult, but they have a great depth and strength in them, and are able to bear down before those temptations and oppositions at which young novices, who are more fierce and noisy, are forced to stop, complain and murmur.

For the World's Crisis.

THE GLORY DEPARTED.

Nothing can be more apparent to every careful observer, than that we are in the days of some apostasy, such as was predicted for the last days; and a great effort by the grace of God must be made, to keep one out of it. Nothing but the Spirit and word, by faith, can keep us alive and aloof from this breathless contagion. Its deleterious influence is felt everywhere, and it takes strong faith, active exertion, and constant confession of the truth and light that shines upon our path, not to be overtaken with it.

Being in the place of my childhood a little while since, the village bell was heard calling the people to their Friday evening meeting. I thought I would avail myself of the opportunity of seeing how it contrasted with former days.

In my early life I had often visited their place of worship, when conviction would follow the earnest appeals and heartfelt prayers of the lovers of Jesus; when the very atmosphere would seem to say, Prepare for the judgment! and a solemn feeling would creep all over you, urging you to accept of Jesus and offered salvation, ere you left the sacred spot.

But what a contrast! A few from a large church, with their minister, had come together. After the hymn, prayer, and reading of the Scriptures by the minister (and that is always good), he gave them a chance to row the boat, hoping they would all take hold; but, really, you would think they were all afflicted with the palsy. After a silence that would crowd out of you all the good feeling and resolution you ever had, a movement was heard, and a feeble testimony followed. After another chill, the second broke silence with a few remarks, and still the voice of the third was heard, with a prayer that followed, and all was over; the minister then closed the meeting.

You may imagine why I did not try and break the spell. I confess I wanted to, but while I was consulting where to begin, how to pitch the tune, and what to say, so as not to frighten but to do them good, the meeting was closed. My soul was stirred within me. I was grieved. No more interest for Jesus, and the saving of men from death—eternal death! I wished and prayed something might be done for them and the cause of the perishing there.

Brethren, we may have some meetings of the like pattern, but, wherever and whenever we come together for worship, we should come alive in the blessed work, have the heart on fire with the love of Jesus and his appearing, so much so that we cannot help but speak it out; then the outsiders that come in will want to come again, and they will be interested and inquire the way of life. O Lord, revive and pity, for thy name's sake! Amen.

L. BOUTELL.

DIVINE PROMPTINGS.

Often, in temporal matters, we are warned by a secret voice, which comes to us like a mandate from above, to do or forbear. It is always wise to accept such warnings. We can not hope to prosper if we sacrifice our own instinct to formal reasons, and the judgment of others. People come to you, when you are hesitating between two courses of conduct, and say, Do thus or so. It is all very well, so long as no instinct of your own prompts otherwise; but if something within you says, Do no such thing, then be sure you do no such thing. If this is true doctrine in matters of temporal import, how much more in things pertaining to our spiritual well-being! Resist not the sacred force! Beware of alienating the divine influence! Whenever you feel yourself prompted to any good work, to any act of kindness or self-denial, to any course of discipline or holy living, accept the impulse, hasten to obey while the fire burns. It is God that speaks in these secret promptings. Harden not your heart when you hear that voice. The Spirit will leave you if you refuse obedience; every warning disregarded is a door closed against future progress. If you do not now the good which you can, the time will come when you can not do the good that you would.—Rev. Dr. Hodge.

LIBERAL OFFERS.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

We are anxious to have our paper reach several thousand new readers the coming year, and become a blessing to them. It is the best means we have of sowing the seed of the gospel of the kingdom in some hearts, and we should all awake, and do whatever we can to have its warnings of the coming judgment reach as many new readers as possible.

Some of our preachers have done nobly, and others would gladly help on the good cause, if they could receive aid for their families while they spend their time for the paper. For the benefit of such, the A. C. P. Society, at a recent meeting, by vote authorized the Agent to pay ten per cent to preachers on all collections for the Crisis and Young Pilgrim; and it is hoped they will take hold of the work in earnest, and have great success. Those who understand the expense of publishing a paper, know that it would cost no more to set up the type for twelve or fifteen thousand copies, than it does for a less number; hence, after our regular issue of about nine thousand copies is run off, we could print several thousand more at the cost only of press work and paper. It has, therefore, been concluded by the Editorial Committee and Business Agent, to whom the Society referred this subject, to make the following liberal offers to new subscribers, to induce them to form clubs, and thus make success easy to all who put forth efforts to obtain new subscribers

TRIAL OFFER.

We will send the World's Crisis three months on trial, to new subscribers, for fifty cents. We ask our friends to obtain yearly subscriptions, if possible; but where subscribers can be obtained for only three months, please visit them again, and, if possible, get them to renew before their paper is stopped at the end of three months.

To aid in obtaining new subscribers for 1871, we make the following offer of nearly

Three Months Free.

We will send the Crisis—for the balance of this year, from the time the name is received—free to all new subscribers for 1871, sent in before Jan. 1st.—Rate $2.50.

Now is the time to subscribe, and put forth energetic efforts to obtain new subscribers.

CLUBBING WITH OTHER PAPERS.

As many persons take several papers, and could be induced to take the Crisis, if they could get two papers at club rates, we have accepted offers to club other papers with the Crisis, which will enable our friends to obtain subscribers where it would otherwise be impossible to introduce our paper.

If any of our regular subscribers wish any of the papers on the list at club rates, they can get new subscribers for the Crisis, as it is not necessary that both papers should be sent to the same address.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS THREE OR SIX MONTHS FREE.

We will send the World's Crisis six months, and the Phrenological Journal and Packard's Monthly (price $3.00) one year for $3.00; or the World's Crisis three months, with the Rural New Yorker (price $3.00) one year for $3.00; or, three months with the New York Weekly Tribune (price $2.00) one year for $2.00; or three months with the Bee-Keeper's Journal and National Agriculturist (price $1.00) one year for $1.00.

ON THE WAY TO CALIFORNIA.

Presuming that our readers would be pleased to hear from us on our trip to California, we will give them a few way-side gleanings. Several have said to us, "Do you not dread your journey? Our answer has been, one should not dread the performance of duty which the Lord requires at our hands. We learned long since that the path of duty is the path of pleasure. There is nothing one should dread so much as to displease the Lord; and when we are assured that he would have us engage in any work, like a loving child, we should go about it with delight. When we have a long journey to perform, it is not well to keep thinking of its end, and the great distance we must travel to reach it; but keep busily occupied with the present and passing events. In short, when we are in the path of duty, we should always wish to be just where we are; not keep longing and sighing to be in some other place that is beyond our reach. We find that a very large part of the trouble experienced in this world is borrowed from the future. Never cross a bridge before you get to it. The Savior has given a special caution against worrying about to-morrow. Said he: "The morrow shall take thought for the things of itself." "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Be thankful for the present, and trust the Lord for the future, and we shall find that the clouds of trouble will depart, and leave us in the pleasant sunshine and smiles of heaven. "Godliness, with contentment, is great gain."

Well, about our trip to California. We left Chicago, Monday, 10.45 A. M., Dec. 12th. We were much indebted to the kindness and energy of Bro. A. M. Billings for R. R. favors. We had a pleasant ride during the day. We fell in company with intelligent, christian gentlemen, with whom we had interesting conversation. This made the time pass very pleasantly; and when evening came, we felt as nicely as ever. At an early hour we inflated our air pillow, put it against the side of the car, asked the Lord for his protection, and went to sleep. At this time we were well into the beautiful state of Iowa. We think this state better adapted to the delight of a farmer's life than any other in the west. The land is well elevated, with rolling prairies and rich soil. Much of the state is yet uncultivated. We passed through thousands and thousands of acres of as nice looking land as we ever saw, without a tree, a fence or house. It seemed like turning a beautiful home out of doors. Semi-occasionally we came to a village springing up in rapid growth. We found in spots a little sprinkling of snow, with mild, pleasant weather.

Tuesday morning, Dec. 13th. The weather is still fine. This is our birthday. We will not say how old, but leave the reader to guess. We feel as fresh as usual, with no more weariness than when we left Chicago yesterday morning. It is a lovely morning. We are now (9.11 A. M.) within a few miles of Omaha. There is no snow here, and it seems more like October than December.

We are now across the Missouri river, at Omaha, all safe. Thank the Lord. We are to leave here about noon, and expect to arrive in San Francisco Friday night, or Saturday morning. The distance from here is one thousand nine hundred and fourteen miles.

From Omaha to San Francisco.

Omaha has grown rapidly during the last five years. It is now said to contain some twenty thousand inhabitants. The Union Pacific R. R. begins at this place. There are five routes to this point from the East. We saw nothing particularly pleasant or inviting about Omaha, that made us desire to remain. A railroad bridge is being built across the Missouri river, that will be a great convenience to the traveling public when completed.

At noon, Dec. 13th, we left Omaha for San Francisco. We came at once to the most beautiful rolling prairie land we ever beheld. We thought Iowa was ahead for handsome land, but we now think Nebraska would take the premium among farmers. But a small part of the land is cultivated, and, like the western part of Iowa, is without fences or trees. It is said the entire absence of timber has been caused by the Indians, who burnt over the land every year. The land is free from stones, and has a very rich soil. Beyond this beautiful rolling prairie land we come to the Platte river valley, which surpasses any plain we ever beheld. It is some four hundred miles long, and is from ten to fifty miles wide. It is bordered by a range of hills, and is level like a floor. It is watered by the Platte river for some three hundred miles. This river is about three fourths of a mile wide; and its average depth is said to be about six inches. Its bed is noted for quicksand, and affords a very uncertain footing for a traveler. This Platte valley, without a tree or shrub, is a rich sight to one brought up among the hills and mountains of New England, surrounded by rocks and heavy timber. It seems a pity to see such extra rich land, so easy of cultivation, lying unused, when there are so many poor people without a home or a garden spot. Here they might have comfortable homes for a small sum of money, but there would be a lack of wood and water.

The shades of evening are closing around us, and we will bid our readers good night.

Wednesday morning, Dec. 14th. The morning is pleasant, but the night has been quite cold. Our car windows are covered with frost, so that we cannot see out till the frost is removed. We have now rode five nights since we left home, and expect to ride three more before we reach San Francisco. We have not taken a sleeping car, neither do we intend to, as we think the money can be better appropriated. They charge seventeen dollars extra for sleeping cars between Chicago and California.

To-day we have passed some very interesting scenery. In the forenoon, we fell in company with an engineer and surveyor, who is very familiar with western life, and from whom we received much interesting information. Only a few days since he had been chased by a party of Indians, with a design to take his life. We were rather surprised to learn of the frequency of murders that happen in western Nebraska and eastern Wyoming Territory. There are several desperadoes who haunt this region, who are frequently captured and executed with but little ceremony. United States troops are scattered through this section to protect travelers from Indian depredations. This is the home of the wild deer, horses, antelope, buffalo, prairie wolves, foxes, dogs, and chickens. Bones of very large animals, and skulls of giants are found in this region.

As we approach the Wyoming territory, the scenery begins to grow more wild, and after leaving Cheyenne, where the road from Denver connects with the Union Pacific, we go up a very heavy grade (some of the way over eighty-eight feet to the mile) till we arrive at Sherman, where we are eight thousand two hundred and forty-two feet above tide water. This part of our trip was novel in its appearance, grand, even sublime, and intensely interesting. We will here copy a few words from the "Trans-Continental Tourists' Guide," descriptive of the appearance of the country:—

"Rocks which, at a distance, might be taken for castles, rise side by side with the wall of an immense fort; churches rear their roofs, almost shading the lowly cottage by their side; columns, monuments, and pyramids are mixed up with themselves and each other, as though some malignant power had carried off some mighty city of the olden time, and wearying of his booty, had thrown it down upon these plains without much regard to the order in which the buildings were placed."

On these elevated plains, covered with the peculiar stones and rocks just described, is an immense quantity of the finest red stone gravel we ever saw. It appears to have been formed by the crumbling in pieces of the stones. It is pure gravel, mostly unmixed with earth.

At the stations in this wild country, we find men of corresponding character, bold, daring, and enterprising, well calculated to endure the hardships of pioneer life in this region. They can tell many thrilling tales of adventures among the snows of cold winters, white desperadoes and Indians of various tribes. Their houses might be properly called shanties, many of them covered with straw. We felt no desire to remain longer than necessary. As we advance, the scenery increases in interest and wild grandeur, till we pass through narrow vales, with mountain rocks rising at our side fifty or one hundred feet, seeming almost to hang over us. These rocks have others on their tops in strange forms, looking as if placed there by design as monumental towers. The sight afforded a rich feast.

We are now (5 P. M. Thursday) at Ogden, one thousand and thirty-two miles west of Omaha, and eight hundred and seventy-two from San Francisco. At this point the Utah Central R. R. starts for the Mormon settlement at Salt Lake City, a distance of thirty-six miles south. On the cars to-day we have had a very interesting conversation with Bishop Sharp, one of the twenty Mormon bishops. He is an intelligent Scotch gentleman, who has been with the Mormons twenty years. The Central Pacific R. R. begins at this point.

Here we close our present notes, in order to send them homeward by the next mail going east. We feel fresher now than at the close of the first day's travel. We have been so interestingly occupied to-day in conversation with a California clergyman, and other gentlemen, on religious matters, and with the passing scenery, that we have scarcely taken any note of time or distance. We think we never passed a day more pleasantly on the cars. We now expect to reach San Francisco Saturday evening, as fresh as when we left home.

OMINOUS.

We find the following interesting item of news from a London special correspondent to the New York World, dated Dec. 7th: "Private letters state that a Spiritualist is retained constantly in company with King William, over whom he exercises complete influence." It is also well known that the Emperor of Russia consults the spirits, and that Napoleon III. is well established in Spiritualism. Jesus informs us, through St. John, that these demons, or "unclean spirits," would "go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty." Rev. 16: 13, 14. These spirits are to be identified by "working miracles." The next great event in connection with their work, is announced in the following language: "Behold I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments." Is it not time to watch? time for a careful examination in relation to spots on our garments? We must be "without spot," if we are ready for the coming of the Bridegroom King.

The evidences are continually increasing on every side to show that our dear Savior is soon coming. We can almost hear the rumbling of his chariot wheels. Soon the parting heavens will reveal his blessed face shining in glory that dazzles the light of the sun. None but "the pure in heart" will be able to stand when he appeareth. Those who have hatred, or variance, cannot inherit the kingdom of God. No one with a root of bitterness in his heart can pass through the gates of pearl into the "city of the great King." It is to be feared that many who believe that Jesus is coming soon are but poorly prepared to meet him. They are indulging in backbiting, evil speaking, hatred, variance, scolding and fretting in their families, evil surmisings, love of the world, pride, selfishness, joking, and lasciviousness, neglecting prayer in the closet, family, and the prayer-meeting; being only stumbling-blocks in the way of others. If, with all the evidence before them that is now shining forth to show that our Lord is soon coming, they are losing ground, and growing cold; can they expect that some prosperous breeze will finally waft them into the desired haven? Such will be doomed to sad disappointment. Satan is doing all in his power to lull people to sleep just at the time when they need to be most awake; just at the time when Jesus has warned us against going to sleep.

No one can keep awake in divine life and indulge in those evil propensities to which we have referred. Blindness and darkness begin to come over him as soon as he allows such things to grow in his heart. The Holy Spirit of God will not dwell among such vipers. If we allow them to defile these temples, then we must be destroyed. The Lord has made provision for our complete cleansing; and if we will not avail ourselves of the means provided, we must suffer the terrible consequences. Who can afford to lose eternal life for the sake of indulging in hatred, variance, lasciviousness, or any other evil thing; when such indulgence only makes one miserable in this life, and disagreeable to those around them? Sin affords no real profits. Holiness gives eternal gain. May the Lord bless the reader with great love for purity, with perfect peace, and a home in the kingdom.

We have just published a tract with the above title, written by Bro. O. D. Woodruff. A good, stirring, timely tract; just the thing to scatter everywhere, and should be scattered by the thousands. Price by mail, 10 cents per dozen; 75 cents per hundred; $6.20 per thousand. Ag't.

"NO HOPE FOR THE POOR."

Under the above caption, the Daily News of our city makes the following sensible remarks; and breathing as they do a true christian spirit, we are glad to give them to our readers:—

"Pews were recently rented in one of Boston's fashionable churches to the amount of more than thirty thousand dollars, the prices ranging from fourteen hundred to three thousand dollars. The mere statement of such a fact discloses one of the most deficient problems the christian church has to solve, and illustrates one of the most alarming faults she has to correct.

The gospel was given to all who sin and suffer, to all who desire to so live, that the rest it tells them of which remaineth for the people of God may be theirs. The gospel was given to man, not to the learned and rich among men, but to man, wherever found and of all conditions. Conditions and persons are not respected, if it were so, we fancy the richest promises and gifts of grace would be to the toiling weary poor of this world. The gospel though given to all has been taken from the poor, and imprisoned in costly Mausoleums, cold, beautiful, magnificent, where none may enter who have no golden keys to unlock its doors, and so the poor of our cities in this christian land are effectually debarred attendance on public worship by the wicked customs into which we have fallen.

How can a workingman who receives twenty dollars a week, secure a pew in any of our leading churches, or if so, could so dress as not to have his poverty made so apparent as to become the notice of all? When pews are held from three hundred to as many thousand per year, how many who toil can sit in them to hear of Him who came to save such as they, of whom he was one, having himself no where to lay his head? The question is its own answer.

We are told that there are free pews. We know it, and we know as well that they are in galleries, or in some part of the church where they become labelled, and known as the home of the dependent, and this is an arrangement not well calculated to secure the attendance of those who, though they toil, are not mendicants, but have a sturdy independence, which scorns charity, except in direst extremities. Thousands in Boston cannot afford to attend church where pews are sold, and where dress is so extravagant that their want makes them singular.

The Catholics, in this, are wiser than we, for their churches are for worshipers, who at the altars are but men, of whom nothing else is known or asked.

Fine churches are well, when they can be erected and dedicated to the worship of God and not to the worship of wealth, fashion, and exclusiveness. But to build such churches is wrong, if it causes the poor to be shut out from its privileges. Missions for the poor beside cathedrals, are an abomination wherever they are established in the interest of exclusiveness, which is in reality quite too often the case.

The remedy for these abuses is plain and easily stated. Let every society build so as to afford sittings for all who can come under their influence, by lavishing no greater expense than can be paid for, without taking pews to pay for the edifice. Let the pews in no case be taxed for an amount in excess of current expenses, and have so many that the amount will be small. Have pews scattered throughout the house, free to those who are unable to pay, and let no such pews be known save to a committee who have this matter in charge.

Where a remedy for these evils is sought, it will easily be found, and we trust we shall see the day when the poor will have the gospel."

SIXTY CENTURIES OF DEATH.

Nearly sixty long centuries have rolled away since man was driven from the garden of Eden, and since the curse was pronounced upon the earth; and during that time sin and death have reigned on earth. But about eighteen centuries ago Jesus entered the grave, and by a resurrection to a deathless state hath in his own person "abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel" (2 Tim. 1: 10), thus presenting himself as a sample of immortalized humanity, or a specimen of eternal life connected with humanity, of which John could affirm: "That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of life; for the life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and show unto you that eternal life which was with the Father." 1 John 1: 1, 2.

"Eternal life" does not exist as an abstract principle, but is the result of a deathless nature, and "Christ being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him"; so in his person "eternal life" was "manifested" to men, and was "seen" and "heard" and "handled" by the apostles after his resurrection; and thus has Christ "abolished death" in his own person, and by a resurrection to a deathless state "hath brought life and immortality to light" in the presence of perishing men, this being manifested to them "through the gospel"; and now Jesus stands above the storms of life, and beyond the billows of death, exclaiming, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold, I am alive forevermore, Amen; and have the keys of hades and of death" (Rev. 1: 18), "and behold I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his works shall be" (Rev. 22: 12), agreeing with Paul's statement: "For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come." Heb. 10: 37.

At the time this statement was made, about forty-two centuries had passed away, leaving about eighteen centuries more to run their course; and so short was the remaining time, when compared with the time which had already elapsed, that the apostle could style it "a little while"; and surely that "little while" is about ending, and with its end comes the Lord Jesus, and with his coming comes the end of the reign of death. Already has earth seen about sixty centuries of death, weeping, and sadness; but a new era is about to dawn, in which "there shall be no more death," for then "the tabernacle of God shall be with men." One dead person has been raised to immortal life as a sample, as a "forerunner," or as a pledge that all the holy slumberers are in like manner to be immortalized. W. S.

THE "SEVENTY WEEKS."

An Iowa correspondent asks, if my view of the seventy weeks is correct, why Josephus makes a space of 639 years from the building of the temple in the time of Haggai to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans? We answer:

1. Josephus himself, in another part of his work, differs from this statement by twenty-five years.

2. He differs about one hundred years from Ptolemy and Bishop Usher. All who are conversant with the various discussions on chronology, are aware that it is a well understood fact that Josephus' great anxiety to prove the antiquity of his people led him to give measurements of time universally repudiated by chronologers, and at war with the Bible.

3. I do not begin the seventy weeks with the building of the temple in the time of Haggai, nor end them with its destruction by the Romans. See "Adventism," pp. 196–208. The sixty-nine weeks, that were to reach "unto Messiah the prince," were to begin with the "going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem"; and God "saith of Cyrus, He is my Shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure; even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built (Isa. 44: 28); he shall build my city, and he shall let go my captives." Isa. 45: 13.

From this epoch, unperverted chronology gives us just four hundred and eighty-three years to the birth of Christ, B. C. 5; agreeing with Gabriel's measurement of sixty-nine weeks of years, and proving Jesus to be the true Messiah. End that measurement anywhere else, and Jesus' claim to the Messiahship is invalidated, for the true Messiah was to come at its termination. W. S.

DID A PROPHET'S SOUL VISIT THE REVELATOR?

The following text is quoted to prove that the disembodied soul of a deceased prophet visited John on the isle of Patmos: "For I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren the prophets." Rev. 22: 9. (1) By reading the preceding verse, we learn that the speaker is an angel, instead of being a disembodied soul of a prophet. "I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which showed me these things. Then said he, See thou do it not; for I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren the prophets"—not one of thy brethren the prophets, but fellow servant of thyself and of them. Tyndal's translation reads: "I am thy fellow servant, and the fellow servant of thy brethren the prophets." (2) Even if the statement had read, as it is often incorrectly quoted, "I am one of the prophets," it would not have necessitated the appearance of a disembodied soul, for two prophets have been translated alive—Enoch and Elijah—and if the Lord had seen fit to send a prophet, instead of an angel, he had living prophets at his command. But John said that it was an angel, and angels are not disembodied saints, as some conjecture, for angels existed before men were created, being of a higher order; and there is no promise that saints are ever to be "equal to the angels" till the resurrection morn. Then we shall be physical beings with deathless natures. W. S.

OUR LACK OF WISDOM.

Well did the Savior affirm, "The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light"; and we are admonished to be "wise as serpents," and at the same time "harmless as doves." Being sent forth "as lambs among wolves," we need wisdom blended with harmlessness. As one lamb cannot compete successfully with a herd of wolves, in a conflict for the mastery, no more can a christian succeed against the enemies of Christ in human strength. The serpent is wise enough to charm its game; and christians ought to possess more of the charming power of the gospel. The children of this world are wise enough to count the cost, and devise plans that will be most likely to succeed; but how prone christians are to act regardless of the infallible plan of the great Head of the church. The principle on which we should act in promoting the cause of God should always be adhered to, but just how to apply that principle to the best advantage, under different circumstances, is left discretionary with us; hence, we need always to have an eye single to the glory of God, leading us to inquire in every emergency, What course will glorify God? With a continual aspiration to please God, we shall be apt to exercise more wisdom in promoting the cause of Christ. W. S.

IMPORTANCE OF THE LORD'S COMING.

The fact that Christ is to make another mission to our globe is so distinctly and so repeatedly brought to view in the Bible, that many are ready to admit the truthfulness of the doctrine who see no importance connected with the agitation of this question, simply because they do not understand the events that are connected with his coming. Let it be understood that the coming of Christ and the judgment are linked together, and that reward is linked to the judgment, and consequently that if the Lord does not come, the judgment cannot come, and that if the judgment does not come, the reward cannot come; and the importance of the Lord's coming is at once apparent. If Enoch was correct in affirming that the Lord is coming "to execute judgment upon all" (Jude 15), there certainly can be no salvation prior to the Lord's coming, for salvation is judgment executed in favor of the saints; and this agrees with Paul's statement, "Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Heb. 9: 28. W. S.

Souls under the Altar.—John "saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain." Rev. 6: 9. But were they disembodied souls? Certainly not, for (1) they are not so called; (2) the affirmation is made at the eleventh verse, "It was said unto them [unto these very souls], that they should rest for a little season, until their fellow servants also and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled." These souls had been "killed," and therefore were not immortal souls, or disembodied personalities. (3) They also cried, "How long, . . wilt thou not judge and avenge our blood"; so these souls had blood, which could not be true of disembodied souls. (4) They are seen under an altar, which seems like a strange place to keep disembodied souls, and quite unlike the usual description of repose on seats of glory among the angels of God. (5) Instead of being represented as singing songs of redemption, and shouting victory, they seem impatiently crying "How long" before judgment? Would disembodied souls feel thus discontented after getting into glory?

The term souls is here used in the sense of persons, and is so translated in Prof. Whiting's version. The altar of slaughter is here brought to view, and these slaughtered persons, or souls that had been "killed," send up a cry like the voice of Abel's blood, for vengeance on their persecutors. It is said "white robes were given unto every one of them"—not literal robes, but "the righteousness of saints" was accredited to them, while they were to "rest yet for a little season" in death—"rest from their labors" like Daniel; "go thou thy way till the end be; for thou shalt rest and stand in thy lot at the end of the days." In death "the weary are at rest." W. S.

For the World's Crisis.

THE NEW YEAR.

We are soon coming to one of those yearly revolutions that will date 1871.

The year almost run has been noted with providential dottings and scriptural fulfillments which speak for God in the certainty of future glory. Kingdoms, thrones, and nationalities are upheaving and changing. The last few months have been prolific in startling events. The Ecumenical Council in its profound deliberations bringing out the loud-sounding declaration—the infallibility of the Pope, causing a moral convulsion amid the terrific thunders and lightning, that made the Vatican tremble and the stoutest hearts quail. The echo of infallibility is not lost in the distance before the French emperor had withdrawn his troops, leaving the infallible monster to his own resources, more helpless than before. The ten horns full of hatred "eat her flesh," not letting her have a vestige of civil power, thus preparing her for burning. Babylon is fallen, and waiting painfully for utter destruction.

Napoleon in turn declares war, and with his mighty military power moves in crusade against the Prussian government; and soon, contrary to all the expectations of the wise of this world in wonder, he is taken captive, leaving the French nation in a state of warfare and anarchy, with a deep-seated strife between republicanism and monarchy, the nations of Europe looking on with jealousy, for fear they will be twisted from a neutral position and plunged in inevitable war.

Russia seems to be looking towards Turkey, eager for the time to come for her strength to be put in requisition for Constantinople and the Black Sea. Earthquakes and tidal waves utter their hearty response to the certainty of the pending crisis. All these, with the certainty of prophetic dates, wickedness increasing to an alarming extent, the love of the many growing cold, the signs that are in the past, the generation that "will not pass till all be fulfilled;"—all, all, show the coming day will wrap in gloom all earthly glory, and bring to naught all earthly kingdoms. It will be well to recount the past year in the light of the prophetic seer.

Then look forward with eagerness and strong faith in the unerring word of prophecy relative to fast coming events. It will be wise. Watch the filling of the last jots and tittles of the prophetic mould. Yes, my dear brethren, we are crowded down, in spite of unbelief, to the last end of the Adamic race. Their overthrow is inevitable, their destruction sure. O dreadful day to the rebels, the unbelieving, that will not yield, or comply with the conditions,—destruction from the presence of the Lord.

But there still is hope for the saints. They are Christ's, Abraham's seed, heirs and equal heirs with Christ, the second Adam, ruler from heaven, the kosmos his.

HOOSIC TUNNEL.

But few of our people know but little about the greatest undertaking of this nation; i. e., boring or digging a hole twenty feet in diameter through the Hoosic or Green mountain, for two tracks for cars to pass from Boston to Albany. The distance through the Tunnel is almost five miles. It was begun about fifteen years ago, and is progressing at the rate of fifteen feet per day, since the central shaft was sunk one thousand and thirty-five feet, which affords two more headings, making six in the whole.

I visited this wonder of the age Saturday, Dec. 17th. Went in at the west end, until noise, darkness, and smoke, advised a retreat. It is a dark, damp, narrow place, about sixty degrees, summer or winter. All the seven hundred and fifty hands work by lamplight, mules and all. We met a number of mules drawing a car load of stone from the heading, with a lamp in the headstall to light the brute along, and as we had no light of our own, the light of the donkey was appreciated in that dark hole in the mountain.

It is wonderful to see where men work, year after year. Surely this is being under the curse heavily,—seventeen hundred feet from the top of the mountain to the track. But few accidents have happened, considering the great danger to which the hands are exposed. It will pay any one to visit North Adams, and see the great wonder of this age.

There is a good Advent church here, and willing to have people of the faith call and see the Tunnel, and worship with them. Preachers especially are invited to call. It is about twenty miles north of the western railroad, from Pittsfield. The cars run there four times daily from Pittsfield, and brethren passing on the western railroad can slip up and preach to them on an evening or Sabbath, and visit the Tunnel next day, which is within fifteen minutes' ride. At our next Springfield campmeeting some are coming to enjoy both the meeting and seeing the great Tunnel, which is about two hours' ride in the cars from Springfield. At that time the campmeeting tickets will bring the fare to $3, both ways, or thereabouts. You can come the same day and spend four hours at the Tunnel, or stay over night with the brethren, and go over the mountain in a stage to the east end, and down the Connecticut river road to the camp-ground the next day. This will be a double object with many in attending the Springfield campmeeting another year, as the work of the Tunnel will then be so easily comprehended and seen. For further and more minute particulars of this gigantic work, you will get the whole plan, work and progress, in Scribner's Monthly for Dec., 1870.

The great ingenuity of this age is one of the last day signs, i. e., increase of knowledge and facilities for traveling; all to take place in the "time of the end" (see Dan. 12), or just before the end. A sight of the Tunnel has strengthened my faith. H. Munger.

PRAYER-MEETING KILLERS.

There is a class of barbarians who roam the land, making fearful havoc. They swing no tomahawk. They sound no war-whoop. But their track is marked by devastation. I mean that class of persons who go from church to church, charged with the mission of talking religious meetings to death. They are a restless tribe, generally disaffected with their own church, for the reason that the church can no longer endure them; and they go about like the roaring lion, seeking whom they may devour.

Though never having seen them before, I can tell them as soon as they enter a meeting. They have a brassy face, a sanctimonious way of rolling up their eye, a solemn snuffle, and a pompous way of sitting down, as much as to say, "Here goes into the seat an awful amount of religion!" They take off their overcoats, pull out the cuffs of their sleeves, give an impressive clearing of the throat, and wait for the time to seize their prey.

If such an one is notoriously inconsistent, he will talk chiefly on personal holiness. Perhaps he failed rich, so that, unencumbered, he might give all his time to prayer-meetings. We know a horse jockey, whose perpetual theme at such meetings was sanctification; and he said he was speeding toward heaven, but on which of his old nags we had not time to ask him.

It sometimes happens that this religious pest confines himself to the meetings of his own church. Interesting talkers are sometimes detained at home by sickness; but his health is always good. Others dare not venture out in the storm; but all the elements combined could not keep him from his place. He has the same prayer now that he has had for the last twenty years. There is in it an allusion to the death of a prominent individual. You do not understand who he means. The fact is, he composed that prayer about the time that General Jackson died, and he has never been able to drop the allusion. He has a patronizing way of talking to sinners, as much as to say: "Ho! you poor, miserable scallawags, just look at me, and see what you might have been!"

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. G. A. STREETER writes:—"How goes the battle in these days? are you gaining ground on the enemy, or are you losing? Are you all packed up and ready for the Master to come? or is the world all packed on you? Are you all cut loose, or are you tied to the things of this world? It is high time that we were awake to this important subject. I am out in the highways and hedges looking after the stray ones. Many a one will be lost as we near the shore. Let us help all we can to keep up good cheer. I am in Bridgewater, Vt., my old field of labor. The children are alive, most of them, and are expecting deliverance soon."

BRO. A. F. DUGGER writes:—"The cause in northwestern Missouri looks up; people are becoming more interested every day. Many, who first refused to hear on these subjects peculiar to the Advent faith, now lend a listening ear, and inquire, Are these things so? and many are coming out on the Lord's side. Praise his holy name!

I have been spending a few days with the Clear Creek church, since Nov. 1st, laboring in word and doctrine. Have preached twenty sermons, during which time sixteen souls have been added to our number. Friday, Nov. 25th, I immersed a number of happy souls into the Christ, also on Sunday and Monday following.

Thomas J. Hobbs, a youth of sixteen, came out during the meeting, and has identified himself with the people of the Lord. He says he wants to share the glories of the coming kingdom. He is a boy of promising talent, and takes right hold of the work in good earnest. May the good Lord bless the youth. It does my heart good to see the youth coming into the fold of Christ."

BRO. AND SR. WM. JOSEPH write from Sunderlinville, Pa., Nov. 20th, 1870:—"We feel it a duty to acknowledge, at least, that we appreciate your valuable paper, the Crisis. There are none very friendly in this place to the cause you advocate, and we have gained some enemies, at least, by our avowal of the truth, as we now see it plainly written on every leaf of the Bible. At the time we first saw your paper, we were firm believers in the popular theology of the day, and would scarce allow ourselves to read such dangerous doctrines as we supposed your columns contained; but now we are truly thankful for the light we have received, and, by assisting grace, will try to let our light shine. We lend our paper to those who will read, and to some who live some distance from us, who prize them much, but are too poor to take any paper. If blest with the means, we would like to send the paper to friends living at a distance, that they might see the truth as it is in the word of God. Their eyes are now blinded by early education and popular doctrines of our day.

We do rejoice that the truth is gaining ground, and hope it will still prevail until that happy day shall come, when righteousness shall cover the whole earth."

SISTER S. A. CUMMINGS writes:—"What a comfort it is to me to think that I have a Father in heaven, who loves me with tender love, who is ever blessing me as he seeth my needs. How sweet to trust in him for every thing; to feel that he will do just what is best in every particular; to know that sleeping or waking his eye is ever over me, to guard me in my helplessness. How blessed to go to him in prayer, to tell him all my griefs, knowing that his ear is ever open to the cry of his children, however feeble it may be. Brothers and sisters in Christ, do you put your whole trust in your heavenly Father? Do you trust him fully? If you do, you are truly blest. Let us remember that his eye is ever over us, and strive to so live as not to grieve that dear Father; but let us say with the poet,

'Come, let us lift our joyful eyes,
Up to the courts above,
And smile to see our Father there,
Upon a throne of love.'"

BRO. D. R. MOORE writes from Jackson, Pa.:—"Go on, brethren, fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life. Jesus is coming to give us life and the inheritance promised to Abraham; 'for if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise.' Let us strive to follow Christ, and induce others to follow the example that Jesus has set us in every-day life. I look forward with joyful anticipation to the time when we shall all be gathered into the kingdom, to enjoy the society of Jesus and the redeemed ones. 'Watch and pray, for ye know not when the time is.'"

BRO. C. H. WILLIAMS writes:—"We are having excellent meetings here in Forestport, N. Y. A deep interest is manifested in the gospel of the kingdom, which is new to most of the people in this vicinity. Conviction seems to rest upon their hearts, and last evening one old man rose for prayers."

SR. L. M. BRITTAN writes from Petersburg, Pa.:—"We came to this place last Tuesday, Dec. 13th, and after looking around the city and surroundings, we have concluded to stop here for the present. We feel the Lord has thus far directed us, and here we are, in less than a week from the time we left home, keeping house in Va. Lord, direct us still. This is a city of twenty thousand inhabitants, seven hundred majority colored. We see them on every corner. There is a great deal of destitution among both classes. Husband's health is about the same as when we left home, better than I should suppose, considering what we have been through. Pray for us, that we may be useful and follow the Lord fully."

For the World's Crisis.

AN ECHO.—I thank the Lord, Bro. Sweet, that one is able to tell us so plainly where he is and what he is doing. It is a blessed place you are in. Would God we might all get into just such a position, and stay there. "Blessed is that servant whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing."

SACRAMENTAL WINE.

Christian people are waking up to the importance of banishing intoxicating wine from the communion table. We do not propose to argue the question at length in this brief article, but simply to call attention to the facts that are constantly occurring. We have known of men whose appetites, long slumbering, have been suddenly aroused, and like a hungry tiger have raged with such intense fierceness as to carry their victims to rapid and pitiless destruction. We know of good christian men who dare not go to the communion lest that thirst for rum should be awakened. We know of men who from conscientious scruples stay away from the Lord's Supper because intoxicating wine is there used. Who will say these facts should be ignored? The majority of church members, perhaps, might partake of such wine with impunity; but can a thing be right that is accompanied with fearful liabilities? Necessity cannot be pleaded as a reason for using such wine, for unfermented wine can be obtained with very little trouble. Let the churches everywhere mend their ways on this point. It is very humiliating for a minister, or member, whose church has abandoned the use of fermented wine, to come to the Lord's table away from home, as they frequently may, and be obliged to drink that which they abhor, or retire from the table, and find their motive misunderstood and misconstrued.

Says the National Temperance Advocate: It is a fearful responsibility for a religious teacher, a reformer, and renovator of old abuses, to throw his influence on the side of vice and drunkenness, by the practice and advocacy of wine-drinking. There are some things that do not belong in the same lot, as pigs and posies, punch and preaching, grog and gospel, wine and wisdom, and the men who try to mix them will find in every case that the element we have just named will determine the character of the compound. Wine must go out of our churches, and be kept out of our members, or both Temperance and Religion will be the sufferers.—St. Albans' Messenger.

A CATHOLIC ON THE "SIGNS."—Father McDavitt, of Washington, in a recent sermon, is reported to have said:

"The inspired writer, in his prophetic eye, over eighteen centuries ago, foretold the signs which would mark the approaching dissolution of the world. Wars and rumors of wars were foretold, rivers of blood should flow, the stars fall from their places in the heavens, the earth tremble, the sun withdraw its light, and the machinery of nature be thrown out of joint. But a few short years ago we had a civil war in our midst, in which torrents of fratricidal blood were shed; and now we have two of the greatest nations in Christendom struggling in deadly grapple, and all the world holds its breath at the horror of the slaughter. Rumors come to us that a greater and bloodier war is threatened; that all Europe will soon be plunged in one great sanguinary maelstrom. Already we have had earthquakes or tremblings of the earth of which the prophets speak, and pestilence and famine, the natural consequences of war, will follow and fill up the catalogue of signs which shall denote the pending collapse of all things."

LAZINESS IN GOD'S HOUSE.—Posture in prayer is of some account. Standing, kneeling, and prostrate, are all mentioned in the Bible. A modern invention adds to those of Scripture authority sitting in the pews. This we are far enough behind the spirit of the age to consider unbecoming and irreverent. It is a city habit mainly. But you will find here and there in country churches, where the old devout habits can be broken in upon, the city style is copied by a select few. This is disrespectful to the congregation and to God. It wears a lazy look. It is not worshiping God with the body and spirit, which are his.

Let all things be done decently and in order. This requires all to join in the worship of the congregation, in united acts of divine service. When they sing, then sing; when they pray, then pray, in the attitude of the adopted custom. —Reformed Church Messenger.

BUSINESS RELIGION.—The Bible allows no slovenliness in business. Christianity encourages invention, promptness, regularity, good humor, good manners, and good living. The resources of earth are abundant for all. If manual labor were made a part of education —an essential in every school and college cirriculum—the world would be brighter and cherrier for the change. It is because labor has been dunned out as a toil for a livelihood —underpaid, overtaxed, unfreshened, and unchurched, that so many toilers are worn, and weary, and forced to be illiterate and melancholy; whereas, if their work and position were properly rewarded, they would be strong, vigorous, intellectual, religious and happy.—Clark's Workday Christianity.

THE SURE FOUNDATION.—A society built upon any man, even upon an apostle as an apostle, will, in the pressure of ages, swerve and fall, however vast the pile; and the greater its dimensions, the more appalling its overthrow at last. The true church does not rest on Peter, or Paul, or Luther, or Calvin, or Wesley, but only, squarely and forever, on Jesus Christ; he is the tried and precious cornerstone on which all believers build their lives, of every age, nation, circumstance and name.

ALLEN. Fell asleep in Jesus, Dec. 14th, 1870, of paralysis, Bro. Warren Allen, of Walpole, Ms., aged eighty-six years and twelve days.

Bro. Allen was a firm believer in the second coming of our Lord and Savior, and rests in hope of a part in the first resurrection at the appearing of the Master. He leaves a young companion and many friends to mourn his loss; but we mourn not as those that have no hope. He was beloved by all who knew him, on account of his firm faith and confidence in God. Words of comfort were spoken by Bro. J. S. White, on the resurrection, showing it to be the only hope of the christian.

SMITH. Died, in Scipio, N. Y., Dec. 9th, 1870, Luther, only son of Elijah and Delia Smith, aged twenty-one years and eight months.

(Haste thy coming, glorious morn!)
When this loved one far away,
We shall meet in endless day.

May the grace of God sustain and comfort the deeply afflicted ones. R. R. YORK.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Dec. 20. It is officially stated that the reports that Turkey has determined to act upon the Eastern question independently of the powers are without foundation or truth.

LONDON, Dec. 21. Despatches from St. Petersburg indicate that the war feeling is increasing in that city and throughout Russia. The tone of the press is imperious and dictatorial, and can in no wise be construed as favorable to a peaceful settlement of the Eastern difficulty.

Immense reinforcements continue to arrive daily for the Prussian armies before Paris, owing to the recent heavy levies of land ordered by King William. Five thousand on an average are daily added to the strength of the investing army.

With respect to the forthcoming meeting of the conference of the ambassadors of the Great Powers in London, it is well known that Prussia has, in her acceptance thereof, expressly stipulated that no topic foreign to the question of the revision of the Paris treaty of '56 shall be introduced into deliberations of that body. The adhesion of France to the treaty is still awaited.

The news this morning from the German army of the North is important. General Manteuffel is again marching on Havre, this time with a much larger force than before. The French report that they have taken measures to resist.

LONDON, Dec. 22. Advices from Berlin state that it is officially announced that unless Paris is surrendered in a given time, a regular attack will be made on all the forts simultaneously. The day and hour for the commencement of the bombardment of Paris has been definitely agreed upon and no further postponement will take place after the allotted time has expired.

LONDON, Dec. 22. Dispatches from Bordeaux state that Gen. Bourbaki, with 150,000 men, successfully formed a junction with Gen. Chanzy on Tuesday night in the rear of the German army, who had evacuated Tours. The French captured 2000 prisoners and a vast amount of ammunition. Prince Frederick Charles' lines were severed.

TOURS BOMBARDED, CAPTURED AND EVACUATED.

BORDEAUX, Dec. 21. There was a severe engagement near Tours yesterday. The French, 6000 strong, fought against 10,000 Prussians with 24 cannon for seven hours. The French finally retreated. The Prussians followed and commenced to bombard Tours, when the Mayor went to the headquarters of the Prussian General and surrendered the town, as there were no troops to defend it; but this evening the Government here announced that the Prussians evacuated Tours to-day, retreating toward Chateau Renault. Gen. Bremer, near Nuits, checked the Prussians. He advises the Government that he can keep the enemy from advancing.

Among the prisoners recently captured are many who state that they have not been a fortnight in France.

BORDEAUX, Dec. 21. A general sortie was made from Paris yesterday. General Vinoy took La Maison Blanche, beyond Gagny, six miles east from Paris, and General Ducrot fought a battle near Bromway.

A balloon has landed at Beaufort, in the Department of Marne et Loire, bringing dispatches for Gambetta. The aeronaut, who left Paris at 2 o'clock this afternoon, reports that Paris was in excellent condition.

Military operations were resumed yesterday, and a battle was fought favorable to French arms. Our artillery was especially successful.

THE SIEGE OF PARIS.

VERSAILLES, Dec. 19. The feeling among the highest officers of the besieging army is that Paris will hold out well into next month. Careful preparations are making for such a contingency, and the various corps in the Provinces are moving so as to shut out, if possible, all hope of rescue. Trochu is expected to give the Prussians some more desperate fighting about Christmas time.

BERLIN, Dec. 22. The Germans under General Gotts have surprised the French in the Department of Haute Marne, and driven them from their position with a heavy loss. Many prisoners, and a large quantity of arms and baggage were taken.

THE FIGHT ON TUESDAY.

A despatch from Versailles states that on Tuesday the fire from the fortifications of Paris was both active and effective. During the cannonade a sortie was made by the French against the Prussian gard and the 12th corps of Saxons. The fighting lasted several hours. The German loss was small.

VIENNA, Dec. 24. Baron Von Beust has refused to submit the Czech memorial to the Emperor Francis Joseph. The Czechs have consequently become exasperated, and threatened to make overtures to Russia with a view to annexation.

FLORENCE, Dec. 24. It has been decided by the government to postpone the transfer of the capitol from this city to Rome until the 30th of June next.

LONDON, Dec. 25. The conference of the great powers to the treaty of Paris as officially announced opens in this city on Friday the 13th of January. It is also semi-oficially stated that M. Jules Favre will be present at the meetings in an official capacity. The consideration of the present troubles between France and Prussia at the conference is yet probable.

Despatches received here state that great dissatisfaction prevails among the French troops of the army of the Vosges, lately commanded by Garibaldi arising out of the failure of the government to provide them with necessary food and clothing. Gen. Canzio and all the Italian officers including Menotti Garibaldi have rendered their resignations.

MUTINY IN THE FRENCH TROOPS.

LONDON, Dec. 23. A despatch from Bordeaux states that information has just reached that city of a serious disturbance which had taken place among the French troops at Belleville, a village in the Department of the Seine, a few miles from and forming a suburb of Paris. Belleville is strongly fortified and is garrisoned by several French battalions. The disturbance is conjectured to have arisen out of some differences existing between several of the battalions. This gave rise to insubordination on the part of the troops, and several battalions became so utterly demoralized as to throw off every semblance of military discipline, and openly disobey their superiors. In consequence of this mutinous feeling being exhibited so very largely among the troops, it was deemed prudent to disband the ringleaders in the movement. A battalion of the national guards and another battalion of a different denomination, both of which had been prominently concerned in the mutiny, were disbanded. At last accounts, quiet had been restored to the camp and comparative order reigned.

In Brief.

— It is generally understood that Rev. Gilbert Haven, Editor of Zion's Herald, has been offered the position of Editor-in-chief of the Independent at a salary of $10,000, and has declined.—It is officially stated that John Bright has tendered his resignation to Parliament, and that it has been accepted.—The Pall Mall Gazette says more lives are lost weekly by scarlatina in London, than the French are losing by their weekly sorties from Paris.—Late advices from China state that the Government is informed that more hostile demonstrations have been made against the Christians at Tein-Tsin. Secretary Wade, of the British Legation at Pekin, reports, under date of the 26th of November that the natives were quiet—Capable women are gradually obtaining lucrative employment in Washington as clerks in the departments and as newspaper correspondents. A few days since a young lady was appointed stenographer on duty in the office of the secretary of the interior, a position which few men could fill.—M. Gambetta is now but thirty-two years of age—and of his Southern blood—for he comes, like the first Bonaparte, of an Italian race, though he was born in France.—With no class in Rome is Victor Emmanuel likely to be more popular than with the Jews. He has opened the gates of the Ghetto. Hitherto even the Rothschilds have been able to get but very few concessions for their co-religionists in the Eternal City, and it was only by an extraordinary favor that the courses of the university were lately in one or two instances opened to Jewish students.—The spots on the sun are now very numerous. The most striking group is that in the form of a pentagon, near the centre of the disk, the five large spots being in the form of the letter X, and these, it is said, can be seen without a telescope.—A Boston chemist says that burnt sole leather enters largely into the composition of the ginger put up in packages.

Religious Items.

—The Jews in England are talking of an Anglo-Jewish translation of the Hebrew Scriptures, as the "authorized version" is not Jewish and they have only those of Leeser and Benisch, which "are not English."—A recent visitor to Spurgeon's tabernacle writes that he is showing signs of wearing out. "He seems less vigorous than formerly, and his cheeks have become broader and more puffy, giving to his whole face, if possible, a more unintellectual look than ever.—The Roman Catholic Bishops of Great Britain have issued a protest against the action of the Italian Government occupying the Papal territory. They call upon all good Catholics to "form "prayer-unions," to protest against the treatment of the Pope, and to prepare documents on the subject which may be made the basis of an appeal to the British Parliament.—The American College erected in Constantinople, at the expense of Mr. Roberts, is now nearly finished. It stands on a splendid site on the Bosphorus, close by the ancient castles built by Mahmond II., the conqueror of Constantinople, and commands a magnificent view.—The Chicago journals tells of a Mr. Lintner, who sent his daughter to a Catholic convent in Bloomington, Ill., stipulating that her religious opinions should not be interfered with. Not long since the father discovered that she had belonged to the Catholic church, and had been known as a Sister of Charity, for two years.—The pew rents of Mr. Beecher's church amount to $56,000 annually, while the church collections are only $15.846. The collections are for the poor only $1.503.—Father Hyacinthe, says the Christian Union, is in London, the guest of Dean Stanley. His health is improved, and he anxiously awaits the return of peace, so that he can return and preach the gospel.—The Pacific, speaking of San Francisco, says that some members of the 1st Congregational church have leased a part of Mechanics Pavilion for the religious services of that church on Sabbath evenings. It will be furnished with twelve hundred chairs, and it will have sittings for not less than two thousand. The seats are all to be free. The location is such —central, accessible, pleasant—as to obviate the very serious objections to the one now occupied. It is hoped and believed that through this movement the masses of San Francisco may be reached by the gospel as never heretofore.

☞ The Rev. C. G. Ames, the Unitarian missionary minister in California, has a helpmeet indeed in his wife. When he is sick she takes his place in the pulpit, and takes care of the babies at home, too. A letter from Santa Clara, where they live, says of her: "Last Sabbath she got up in the morning and prepared breakfast, washed and dressed her baby, dressed her little daughter for Sabbath-school, put baby to sleep, sat down and reviewed her sermon before time to take the cars for church, when, consigning baby to the loving care of his grandmother, she went to church and preached to the entire satisfaction of a large and critical audience."

DR. DWIGHT once passed through a region of very poor land. He said to a farmer, "Sir, I perceive your land is not very productive." "No, sir," said the honest farmer, "our land is just like self-righteousness." "Ah! how is that?" "Why, the more a man has of it, the poorer he is."

Notice.

At the Ohio State Conference, Bro. C. D. Jefferson proposed to furnish a Mission Tent for the State, provided the conference furnish two preachers to go with the tent. The following brethren were appointed to solicit pledges for the above purpose, and report to the president of the conference, on or before the first of Jan., the amount pledged; and if sufficient is pledged, Bro. Jefferson will proceed to furnish the tent, and we shall endeavor to put two good and faithful laborers in the field to labor for the cause of truth: A. B. Benedict, Nevada, O.; J. M. Treadwell, Fairfield; Martin Agner, Rockbridge; S. F. Rodgers, Norwalk; A. Mackey, Seal; Martin Bacon, Bucyrus; P. T. Light, Plymouth; Dr. H. Keller, New London; Bro. Beadly, White House, Lucas Co.; Thos. Boardman, Shiloh; Henry Rust, Stryker; Wm. Seddall, Pioneer; Geo. English, Montpelier; N. R. Cheadle, Delta; Geo. B. Terwilliger, Antwerp. Dear brethren, now is the time for action. Will you take hold of this matter at once, and report your success, so that we may know what to do? and the Lord will bless you.

E. McCULLOCH, President of Conf.

P. S. Churches desiring the first quarterly conference held with them, will please notify us immediately. E. M.

PEACEFUL REST.

The day of rest will surely come,
The faithful then shall all get home;
The storms of life will soon be o'er,
And we shall grieve and sigh no more.
We then shall walk the golden street,
Where saints and angels all shall meet,
And praises to our heavenly King
Eternally we then shall sing.

No sorrow there, no tearful eye,
No bed of pain, no weary sigh;
No night of death, nor dismal tomb,
But one eternal, happy home.
Our Savior then will be our guide,
And we may walk by his blest side,
While journeying through the city bright,
And climbing up the mountain hight.

O hasten, Lord, that glorious day,
"Thy kingdom come," we humbly pray;
May we live daily in thy fear,
That when we see our King appear,
We may rejoice, and sing the song—
"This is our God; we've waited long;
He's come to save us," we'll be glad,
And nevermore shall heart be sad.

May thy blest Spirit guide our life,
Whilst dwelling here 'mid sin and strife;
And may we seek to please thee more,
That ere we reach that peaceful shore,
We'll hear the welcome voice, "Well done!
Come, weary pilgrim, to thy home;
The crown is thine; enter, ye blest,
Into thine everlasting rest."

THE MISSION OF CHRIST.

BY MRS. H. V. REED.

"Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world."

The world is full of missions—missions to the wave-washed shores of England and the blood-stained valleys of France—missions to the ice-bound seas of the north and the burning plains of the south. But the mission of the Son of God is one in which every child of Adam has an interest.

When Eve had eaten the apple and her lord had partaken too, when the penalty was promised and the earth was cursed—when thorns and thistles came up instead of the myrtle and fig tree, then sin and sorrow dwelt with man and the heavens were mantled with clouds. But the light of hope was seen in the eastern sky, and a Savior came to earth's suffering children. He came with his heart of love and hand of mercy—with words of wisdom and touch of healing. His sweetly solemn face bent over the dying couch, and never bent in vain. In the lands of poverty and in the streets of Jerusalem—by the weary way-side, while his tender feet were torn and bleeding, he gave the blind their sight, and made the deaf to hear.

The burden of his message to man was that the kingdom was coming; the most glowing theme of divine revelation received a new beauty from his hallowed lips; the same kingdom which had been pictured in rapture by the pen of prophecy, and of which the bards of the Bible had only caught a view in their grandest flights was to him a constant, and soul-absorbing theme. It was he who brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. Beyond the dark mystery of the tomb arose the golden light of the resurrection. It was the day-star upon the ocean of superstition—the deepest lore of their philosophers had never reached it. The highest strains of their poets had never soared to its sublime height. Rome, whose eagles fluttered in every breeze, contained within her walls thirty-eight thousand gods, as powerless to save as to teach; their temples glittered on every hill-top, and the smoke of sacrifice to heathen deities arose from every summit. Egypt had taught the transmigration of the soul, and the priests held the minds of men in bondage. But the voice of the Messiah rang through the massive walls of superstition, bearing the light of life to those who sat in darkness and in the shadow of death.

We cannot linger where the tempest lashed the blue waves of Gennesaret, and the chainless winds swept lower at his bidding. We may not stay by the widow's son, where the white seal of death was broken by his touch. We need not wait amid the smiling beauty of Judea's vales, or stay at the troubled pool, nor walk with Peter upon the troubled waves of Galilee. But we pause reverently at the sacred feet of mount Tabor, and review for a moment the glorious vision of the transfiguration. It was the glory of the kingdom that shed its lustre over the scene, and the heir of the universe, whose vestments glared with more than royal splendor. The pillar of cloud above his head was the pavillion of God's voice, and from its radiant centre came the words, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased—hear ye Him." The heavenly benediction rested upon the Savior's brow, and rang through the hearts of the listeners, but the vision faded, the glory departed, they left the hallowed summit of Tabor, and the Son of God renewed his labors.

We have no heart to repeat the mournful scene of Gethsemane, where the night winds moaned through the olive trees, as if in sympathy with a Savior's suffering. We need not dwell upon the particulars of a trial so devoid of justice, that even Pilate washed his hands in the presence of the multitude, saying, "I find no fault in him." We follow Him to the mount made sacred through time and eternity by his blood and agony. The sun veiled his face while the "Sun of Righteousness" was under eclipse. Perhaps it is not too daring a thought to suppose that the stars of heaven faded as the wing of the death angel darkened the face of the "Bright and Morning-star." Perhaps the shadow from the brow of the dying Savior swept over the radiant constellations of the universe of God, until for three hours all was gloom save the throne and form of the Eternal. But the fearful tragedy is closed, the seal of death is placed upon the Savior's brow, and the act of the maddened throng is laid away in the archives of heaven, to await the hour when the books are opened, and the judgment shall sit. The body of Jesus is wrapped in spices and fine linen, and lain in the rock-hewn sepulchre of the garden. The sealed stone is placed at the entrance, and he slumbers beneath the olive trees. Not alone did Roman soldiers watch that hallowed spot, the angels hovered around the sacred trust, guarding with careful eye their sleeping Prince. The bright design of God flashed through the granite walls, and on the morning of the third day, the glories of the morning radiated a broken tomb. Earth quivered beneath the shock as an angel descended from the courts of heaven and touched the Roman seal. The rock-bound tomb gave up its precious trust, [illegible] the resurrection of the Son of God was the glory-lit star of prophetic fulfillment, which throws its halo around the grave, and will light the darkness of the tomb, as long as death remains triumphant over mortality. It was the key-note to the grand anthem of future life, which shall roll over the vale of Eden restored, when unnumbered millions shall chant the exulting song, "Oh death, where is thy sting? oh grave, where is thy victory?" . . .

Our Lord will come again, for he came to seek and to save that which was lost, and his work is not yet done, man is still lost; the tree of life is still lost; the soil is polluted and the air tainted; mountains are stained and the ocean tempest tossed, from Alpine snows to sunny vales the curse still lingers. But when he comes again the mighty work will be completed, for he will not come as a helpless babe, but robed in power and great glory. He will not come as lamb to the slaughter, but as a crowned victor, glorious in his might. His brow will not wear a diadem of thorns, but on his head many crowns. He comes, not in lowly form, paying tribute to the kings of earth, for "the loftiness of man shall be bowed down, the haughtiness of man shall be made low, and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day, for he comes as "King of kings and Lord of lords."

The bright vales of earth will welcome their king, the floods of the great deep will chant a song of triumph through ocean's heaving core,—the grand old mountains of earth repeat the glad news through all their echoing caves—the gladdened hill-tops will smile in the sun-light of Eden restored.

The heir of David's royal throne will sway the sceptre of universal dominion, and God's ancient people shall dwell safely, for a king shall reign and prosper, and this is the name whereby he shall be called, "The Lord our righteousness." That name will echo over the broad domain of earth, in the grandest notes of music, it will roll through the long aisles of eternity a perpetual anthem of peace and love. The bright surface of the crystal sea will quiver in gladness beneath the sound, and millions of earth shall unite in the chorus, for "all nations shall call him blessed."—The Restitution.

AN "O. P. J." ACCOUNT.

"An eastern banker (Jay Cook of Phila.), early in his career read "Gold in the Gospel," and resolved to take Jacob's pledge, "Of all that thou shalt give me, I will surely give the tenth unto thee." He directed his clerk to open an account with O. P. J. (Old Patriarch Jacob), and to credit to it one-tenth of all the commission that came into the office. Some of the largest financial transactions of the country have been entrusted to the firm of which he is a member, and its success is one of the wonders of the land. The aggregate of the drafts upon this O. P. J. account must now amount to a sum that would take the figures of five places to express. When asked how he can afford to give such large contributions, he says, 'It don't cost me anything; It's the Lord's money I give.'

Who will follow suit, and open an account with 'Old Patriarch Jacob'?"

"Make channels for the streams of love
Where they may broadly run,
And love has overflowing streams
To fill them every one.

But if at any time we cease
Such channels to provide,
The very founts of love for us
Will soon be parched and dried;

For we must share, if we would keep
That blessing from above;
Ceasing to give, we cease to have,—
Such is the law of love."

A RARE CASE.

A pastor of a country church in Connecticut was visited by a gentleman soliciting for the cause of the Freedman. On Saturday evening the good pastor was overheard to say, by the gentleman in question, "There is n't a dime to buy one." They were speaking of a barrel of flour for the family. Before the evening was over, Deacon A. called for a case of charity. A brother of the church was sick the whole year; he was a brother beloved, but under the misfortune was embarrassed and depressed. Every body welcomed the subscription paper for a Christmas testimonial to the brother in question. The figures had run up near $200 before Deacon A. had reached the pastor's, where he called to see if may be the minister would like to add a little something to Deacon A.'s testimonial. "Most certainly I should," said the willing pastor, as he withdrew to another room, from which he returned in a moment bringing a bank bill. Another name was entered on the subscription paper. Opposite was $5, marked paid.

The following Sunday evening brought wind, snow and ice, as is not often seen; the services for that evening were omitted, and the gentleman soliciting for the cause of the Freedman commenced conversation upon the work among the Freedmen, their poverty, etc. The willing pastor expressed his regret, and slipped out of the room for a moment, and came back with his gift for the cause; it was a $10 bill, which the gentleman hesitatingly took, saying, "Pardon me, my brother, but there is something about this which I do not understand. Did I not hear you say that there was no money in the house to buy a barrel of flour with?" "Yes sir, and that is true. This is not our money, it is the Lord's, and we never run in debt, and never borrow of him." The pastor related the rule and habit of his family, now tested for many years,—to lay aside at least a tenth of all incomes for the Lord; how happy they had been in it, and how they delighted to respond to calls and give to the suffering.

REMARKABLE MEMORIES.

Maglibecchi, the founder of the great library at Florence, had so wonderful a memory that Gibbon styled him "memory personified." At one period of his life Seneca could repeat two thousand words precisely as they had been pronounced. Gassendi had acquired by heart six thousand Latin verses, and in order to give his memory exercise, he was in the habit of daily reciting six hundred verses from different languages. Saunderson, another mathematician, could repeat all Horace's odes, and a great part of the Latin authors. La Croze, after listening to twelve verses in as many languages, could not only repeat them in the order in which he heard them, but could also transpose them. Pope had an excellent memory, and many persons have amused themselves by looking through his writings and pointing out how often he [illegible] by rote, and he could repeat correctly any long, dry document, such as a deed or act of Parliament, after having heard it read; but if he wanted any single paragraph, he was obliged to begin at the commencement, and proceed with his recital until he came to what he required. There was a French novelist, who, being a printer, composed a volume in type, and thus the book was printed without having been written. Bishop Warburton had a prodigious memory, which he taxed to an extraordinary degree. His "Divine Legation" would lead one to suppose that he had indefatigably collected and noted down the innumerable facts and quotations there introduced; but the fact is that his only note-book was an old almanac, in which he occasionally jotted down a thought. Scaliger obtained so perfect a knowledge of one Latin book, that he offered to repeat any passage with a dagger at his breast, to be used against him in case of a failure of memory.—Mathematical Almanac and Annual.

THE BIBLE.

The following description of the Bible was found in Westminster Abbey, nameless and dateless:

A nation would be truly happy if it were governed by no other laws than those of this blessed book.

It contains everything needful to be known or done.

It gives instructions to a senate, authority and direction to a magistrate.

It cautions a witness, requires an impartial verdict of a jury and furnishes the judge with his sentence.

It sets the husband as the lord of the household, and the wife as the mistress of the table: tells him how to rule, and her, as well, how to manage. It entails honor on parents, and enjoins obedience on children.

It prescribes and limits the sway of the sovreign, the rule of the ruler, and the authority of the master; commands the subjects to honor, and the servants to obey; and the blessing and protection of the Almighty to all that walk by its rule.

It gives directions for weddings and burials.

It promises food and raiment, and limits the use of both.

It points out a faithful and eternal guardian to the departing husband and father; tells him with whom to leave his fatherless children, and whom his widow is to trust; and promises a father to the former, and a husband to the latter.

It teaches a man to get his house in order, and how to make his will; it appoints a dowry for his wife; entails the right of the first born; and shows how the young branches shall be left.

It defends the rights of all, and reveals vengeance to every defaulter, over-reacher and trespasser.

It is the first book, the best book.

It contains the choicest matter; gives the best instruction; and affords the greatest degree of pleasure and satisfaction that we have ever enjoyed.

It contains the best laws and most profound mysteries that were ever penned; and it brings the very best of comforts to the inquiring and disconsolate.

It exhibits life and immortality from time everlasting, and shows the way to glory.

It is a brief recital of all that is to come.

It settles all matter in debate; resolves all doubts; and eases the mind and conscience of all their scruples.

It reveals the only living and true God, and shows the way to him; and sets aside all other gods, and describes the vanity of them, and all that trust in such; in short, it is a book of laws to show right and wrong; of wisdom that condemns all folly and makes the foolish wise; a book of truth that detects all lies, and confronts all errors; and it is a book of life, that shows the way from everlasting death.

It contains the most ancient antiquities and strange events, wonderful occurences, heroic deeds and unparalleled wars. It describes the celestial, terrestrial and infernal worlds, and the origin of the angelic myriads, the human tribes and the devilish legions.

It will instruct the accomplished mechanic and most profound critic.

It teaches the best rhetorician, and exercises every power of the most skillful arithemetician, puzzles the wisest anatomist, and exercises the wisest critic.

It is the best covenant that ever was agreed on; the best deed that ever was sealed; the best evidence that was ever produced; the best will that will ever be signed.

To understand it, is to be wise indeed: to be ignorant of it, is to be destitute of true wisdom.

It is the king's best copy, the magistrate's best rule, the housekeeper's best guide, the servant's best directory, and the young man's best companion; it is the school boy's spelling book, and the great and learned man's masterpiece.

It contains a choice grammar for the novice and a profound mystery for a sage.

It is the ignorant man's dictionary and the wise man's directory.

It affords knowledge of witty inventions for the humorous, and dark sayings for the grave; it is also its own interpreter, and that which crowns all this, that the author is without partiality and without hypocrisy, "With whom there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning."

THE HOLIDAYS.

We find in the Independent, from the pen of Hon. Schuyler Colfax, some suggestions appropriate for the season, well worthy of being read by all, extracts from which we give our readers:—

"Seek out and rejoice the hearts of the poor. In the unequal distribution of the wealth of the world they are ever at your doors. Prospered yourself in the world's goods, blessed in basket and in store, you can scarcely realize the hardships of their lot. Struggling against reverses, against destitution, against temptation, the path they daily tread is full of thorns, while yours is lined with flowers. If you have never tasted the joy that active benevolence brings to the heart of the cheerful giver; if you would realize that 'charity is twice blessed'—blessing him that gives even more than those who receive; if you would feel an unwonted thrill of pleasure, seek out some widow who strives by honest industry to earn a livelihood for herself and the little ones left her to care for, and send to her humble home the flour or wood or meat that will make 'the week of holidays' so happy to her. And, as you sit by your bright fire at night, with those you love around you, the thought that you have made one family happier at this festal period will be your abundant reward. There is an inspired promise, too, for such good works: 'Blessed is he that considereth the poor. The Lord will deliver him in trouble, the Lord will preserve him and keep him alive; and he shall be blessed upon the earth.'

Visit the sick. Around you are those prostrated on beds of anguish by consuming fever or incurable maladies. Their days are full of pain; their nights weary with watching for the morn. The tide of busy, active life around them sweeps on, regardless of these almost unnoticed eddies. Comrades and neighbors miss them, perhaps, from their accustomed place; but business, domestic cares, incessant duties consume their time, and the invalid suffers comparatively alone. Bring sunshine to this darkened hearth-stone by your cheerful presence. Warm this chilled heart by genial kindness and sympathy and assistance—by needed comforts for the body, [illegible] affection. If not rich in possessions, and some comfort of life has been lacking, something to make work less toilsome and wearing in your household, remember that the one by your side has given her life to you and yours, and make her heart happy as the bells ring in the New Year for her and you.

Settle all controversies. Let them die with the old year in which they were born. Happy is he who lives at peace with all men. Unhappy the man who, stern and unconciliating, allows differences with his neighbors to increase in number and intensify with time. Better, far better, to make advances for concord's sake, even if your conscience acquits you of wrong in your controversies. How often a few kind words and a frank and manly explanation dissipate all antagonism and restore estranged neighbors to all their old friendly relations.

Remember your employes. If you are one who has those under you to whom you say, Come, and he cometh, or go, and he goeth—who give you the labor of their sinews and muscles, the power of their arm or their brain—let them share, if ever so slightly, in your prosperity, that their week of holidays may be cheered with some unexpected delight, that their families may rejoice as yours does at the advent of a period consecrated to benevolence and good-will. . . .

In a word, purge yourself of selfishness. This is a besetting sin, from which all of us should pray to be delivered. Living for self alone, men carry with them to their graves hearts of steel and faces of iron. Cold, austere, repulsive, no noble charity affects their souls, no generous act unlocks their hearts, no blessings are invoked on their heads. But, in seeking to make others happy, you will cause a constant influx of gladness into your own heart, and will make yourself indeed loved while living and mourned when dead. To close, as I commenced, you will send your good deeds before you, a richer possession than all the wealth you may leave behind you."

LINES.

ON THE DEATH OF SISTER AUGUSTA A. DOW, OF SEABROOK, N. H.

Farewell to thee, dear sister,
In the grave thou art at rest,
But Jesus soon will summon thee
To the home of all the blest;
Then thou'lt meet thy loved ones,
And with them ever stand,
In spotless robes around God's throne,
A radiant, happy band.

Farewell to thee, dear sister,
The cross thou hast lain down;
Soon thou'lt bear the palm in glory,
And wear the victor's crown.
In that land of peace and gladness
Thou wilt be a happy guest,
Where all are made immortal,
And the weary ever rest.

We will think of thee, dear sister,
As we journey on our way,
And we hope ere long to meet thee
In the realms of endless day,
Where care can never enter,
Nor sorrow rend the breast,
Where all are made immortal,
And the weary ever rest.

Gems.

— In the judgment day there will be fearful reckoning against soft, white hands, as well as against hard, black hearts.

— There be many that in words are ready to praise that which is good, but few that in works are willing to follow the same.

— Christians, if you be poor in this world, you should be rich in faith; and if you be rich in this world, be poor in spirit.

Make your life beautiful, use its best hours
Planting waste places with learning's rich flowers.

— More men fail for want of energy than for want of ability.

— Three things are commendable in a scholar; silence in his tongue, diligence in reading, civility in his behavior.

— For a man to praise too much his own writings, is nothing else but to give men occasion to speak evil both of him and his works.

Grope not through the world supinely,
Wasting manhood by the way;
But arise, and act divinely,
Working with the shining day.
Every spark from action beaming,
Makes the path of duty clear;
Every moment lost in dreaming,
Brings remorse of spirit near.

— No men are more prompt to plead the harmlessness of error than those who would resolve all the mediatorial deeds and sufferings of Jesus Christ into the exercise of his prophetical office. Surely such persons should be the very last to defend a position so absurd. If error is harmless, where was the necessity that a messenger should be sent from heaven merely to be a teacher?

— Praise is a poison to an ambitious man, for it leadeth him beyond the scope of honesty.

— A crowd is not company, and faces are but a gallery of pictures, and talk but a tinkling cymbal, where there is no love.

— Lost yesterday, between sunrise and sunset two golden hours, each set with sixty jeweled minutes. No reward is offered, for they are gone forever.

— Let no man wax pale because of opposition. Opposition is what he wants and must have.

He will come in his own time and power,
To set his earnest-hearted children free;
Watch only through this dark and painful hour,
And the bright morning yet will break for thee.

— Where the matter itself bringeth credit, a man for his gloss deserveth small commendation.

— The nettle mounteth on high, while the violet shrouds itself under its own fragrance.

— He boasteth in vain of his great lineage, that, having no goodness in himself, seeketh to be esteemed for the nobility of his ancestors.

— A christian ought to be a polite man; not necessarily with the airs and graces of mere fashionable society, but certainly with genuine heart-politeness.

— A dog that barketh much, will bite but little; and the man that uses to make great promises, will yield but small performance in the end.

If words could satisfy the breast,
The world might hold a feast;
But words, when summoned to the test,
Oft satisfy the least.
Like plants that make a gaudy show,
All blossom to the root,
But whose poor nature cannot grow
One particle of fruit!

IT WILL DO TO PUT IN THE PLATE.

Trading with a market woman one day, I chanced to pay her a bad penny. She examined, and was about to return it; but suddenly dropped it in her pocket, saying, "It will do to put in the plate."

The incident has its counterpart and moral. When I see a man carefully concealing his gift in the hollow of his hand, and putting it in with the back of his hand up, I feel quite sure he is thinking "it will do to put in the plate."

When I find a man more familiar with the text, "Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth," than with any other, I cannot avoid the conviction that his right hand must be nearly as ignorant on the subject of Christian beneficence as his left, and that whatever he gives, he supposes "it will do to put in the plate."

When I hear a lady, in the richest attire, and with as many hoops on her fingers as a cooper would put on a very weak cask, bemoaning the condition of the poor, while [illegible] they are never seen sending them a ton of coal, a quarter of beef, or a barrel of flour, I take it for granted that whatever they may give "will do to put in the plate."

And when, as is sometimes the case, depreciated bank-notes, smooth shillings, and outlandish coins are found—the halt, the lame and the blind—it is very strange that sensible people should think of such, "it will do to put in the plate."

A very different opinion is expressed in Malachi 1: 8.—Earnest Worker.

For the World's Crisis.

IS IT GOOD DOCTRINE?

What is true and right is good. But, is it true and right to teach men that they ought not to build houses, barns, and such other buildings as are needed, and ought not to build stone fence, set trees and vines, because the Lord is coming so soon?

No, sir. This is bad doctrine, and is calculated to bring the truth of Christ's coming into disrepute, and prevent sensible people from embracing it. Good men may teach thus, and think it right, but that will not make it right. If men are worldly-minded, covetous, and blind to the claims of God, it will not cure the evil to tell them not to be diligent, prudent, and industrious. Get them to see that they should give themselves to God, and love him, and do all they can to glorify him, and then when they work they earn money to help on the cause of Christ and humanity.

But is it not a denial of our faith to build, and plant trees? Not if we have a correct faith, and if we have not we ought to get one that is correct. Some have had a kind of faith that kept their children out of school, and out of work, and themselves also. Were they benefited by it? Did facts sustain such faith? Others who fully believed the Lord was coming soon, but did not know how soon, had faith to keep their children out of idleness, and to "occupy" upon their talent, build such buildings as were needed, and such fences as they had material to build with, and have had the privilege of entertaining many pilgrims since, who condemned them at the time. They had faith to plant trees, clear lands, raise stock, project various other plans and execute them, to earn an honest living, and to carry "the gospel of the kingdom of God" "into regions beyond," as well as to maintain it at home.

This is the gospel faith, the working faith, and that works for Christ, in preaching, praying, giving, earning money in all righteous ways to help the needy and spread the truth. We do not refer to worldly, niggardly, stingy, covetous, penurious men, but to faithful men who love Christ and love the truth of his soon coming, and know how to earn money to help preach it. Shall we disconcert and discourage them? If we try to dictate and tell them what labors they must abandon to show their faith, does it not tend to alienation and doubt, and lead men of good sense and calculation to give up a faith that refuses them the right to attend to business which all know must be performed so long as mortality continues.

All production, of material value,—agricultural, mechanical, intellectual or commercial, is important for man's use while time lasts. And as we do not know exactly when it will end, neither who is to enjoy and occupy upon what we produce, let every man of God act his part in the world's work, in the love and fear of God, remembering that each must give account for himself when Jesus comes.

I. C. WELLCOME.

Hygiene.

"This is for your health."—PAUL.

"HEALTH BY GOOD LIVING."

The above is the title of a book recently published by Hurd & Houghton, New York, and written by Dr. W. W. Hall. It contains much that is beneficial, and we shall occasionally give our readers extracts from it. Under the head of "How much to Eat," we quote the following:—

"When nature prompts a man to cease eating, it is because hunger is appeased; as much food has been taken as there are stomach juices enough to take care of. Every mouthful swallowed after that is without one drop of gastric juice to take care of it, to keep it from rotting; and that single mouthful, being unprovided for, becomes tainted food, and corrupts, to that extent, the whole mass besides; the whole amount of blood made from that meal is, to that extent, corrupted and made impure, and mixing with the blood already in the system, as it does in the heart and lungs, the whole mass of blood in the human body is tainted to the extent of that mouthful swallowed which was not wanted, but was forced on the unresisting stomach for the pitiful purpose of 'saving' what was not intrinsically worth one single cent. To 'save' less than a penny, a rational man corrupts the whole mass of his blood, renders it impure, makes his blood 'bad'; and all know that 'bad blood' is the very fruitful cause of human suffering, because where there is bad blood in the human body, it is liable to affect injuriously and painfully any portion of the system, or every portion of it, according to circumstances; hence those who eat too much are never well, are always complaining, and legitimately so, because their blood is never pure and healthful, but is always bad, always diseased, always corrupting.

While it is a good rule for the man who works hard out-of-doors to eat as much as he wants at breakfast and dinner, he and all others ought to take light suppers, if no special labor has to be done until next day. By a light supper is meant a bowl of mush and milk, or stirabout, or boiled cracked wheat, or corn, or other grain. Better, however, than all these would it be if the supper was rigidly confined to a single piece of cold bread and butter, and one cup of warm drink, of any kind of herb tea; and it is believed that nothing answers the purpose so well as the common 'black tea' of commerce.

EFFECTS OF SMOKING ON BOYS.

Dr Decaisne, in the course of investigation on the influence of tobacco on the circulation, has been struck with the large number of boys, aged from nine to fifteen, who smoke, and has been led to inquire into the connection of this habit with impairment of the general health. He has observed thirty-eight boys, aged from nine to fifteen, who smoked more or less. Of these, distinct symptoms were present in twenty seven. In twenty-two there were various disorders of the circulation; bruit de souffle in the neck, palpitation, disorders of digestion, slowness of intellect, and a more or less marked taste for strong drinks. In three the pulse was intermittent.

In eight there was found on examination more or less marked diminution of the red corpuscles; in twelve there was rather frequent epistaxis; ten had disturbed sleep; and four [illegible] twelve; nineteen, from twelve to fifteen. The duration of the habit of smoking was, in eleven, from six months to a year, and in sixteen more than two years. The ordinary treatment of anæmia in general produced no effect as long as the smoking was continued; but when this was desisted from health was soon perfectly restored, if there was no organic disease.—British Medical Journal.

☞ There are those besides the sluggard who think that "early to bed and early to rise," is a maxim which may reasonably admit of modifiertion in the case of some. Six hours may do for the one who is only physically weary, who can fall asleep as soon as he lies down. It is different with the mind weary. Some time must elapse between the close of labor and the hour of repose in sleep, if we would have the brain wheels stop, and the slumber dreamless and quiet.

☞ Sunshine, heat, air, water, food, and exercise, are the chief necessaries of life.

PICKING UP THE SUNSHINE.

I was calling on little Willie's mother not long since: it was one of those days, so often found in the April time, of occasional showers and sunshine. The mother sat in the window at her sewing, and little Willie was on the floor at her feet among his playthings.

As we sat chatting pleasantly together, the clouds broke away, and the bright sunshine poured into the room. Willie uttered a cry of delight, and began creeping over the floor very fast, until he sat in the full glory of the light, and then began playing with the sunbeams, trying to catch them with his tiny hands, and putting them upon his golden head, and over his rosy face.

"My Willie is picking up the sunshine," said his mother. "No matter where he is: if he sees the sunbeams pouring in, he thinks he must catch them, and cover himself with them. Sometimes he will follow me into a darkened room, where the sun's rays struggle in through the closed shutters in fine lines of light. He does not seem in the least afraid of the darkness, but runs to the beautiful rays, and fairly crowns himself with glory. I hope that Willie will always be watching for the sunshine through his life, and let the clouds and darkness only be the means of his seeing and loving the light more clearly."

Now, little readers, can we not all be "picking up some sunshine" everywhere, if we have a mind to try, and keep ourselves crowned with it like a glory about our heads and about our feet wherever we go?

Some children seem as if they always lived under a cloud. They have the sulks when they first waken in the morning, sulks over the refreshing bath, and sulks for the comb in the tangled hair; sulks when they go down to breakfast with pouting lips and tearful eyes: often under a cloud, they will not look around them "to pick up the sunshine."

Others seem to waken with the sunlight all over them: the bright, sweet smiles (which are better than sunbeams) radiate all over the happy face, and creep around the rosy mouth, —sunshine in the nursery, sunshine in the breakfast-room, sunshine in the school-room and on the playground. Such children, like little Willie, can find sunshine even in dark places.

Oh, how I love to sit in such a sunshine!—the sunshine of glad, happy, loving hearts, beaming over the countenance, and shedding brightness everywhere,—the sunshine of sweet smiles.

Little children, dark days will come to all of us: we all shall know of sickness and sorrow and death; and at such times we feel indeed as if we were under a cloud, and the sunlight seems a mockery to us. But the sunlight of God's love shines behind the cloud: it is still around and over us. Let us not forget that, but wipe away our tears, that our eyes may not be too dimmed to see the glory. Like little Willie, let us not be afraid of the darkness, but press on to seek for the light which our eyes see afar off.

The little ones who love the blessed Savior, and seek him in simple, earnest prayer, ever trying to do his bidding, always bear that peaceful light from within which overspreads the face like a gleam of sunshine, telling of that peace of God which passeth all understanding.—Well-Spring.

A HOME SONG.

O, little child, lie still and sleep;
Jesus is near—
Thou need'st not fear;
No one need fear whom God doth keep
By day or night;
Then lay thee down in slumber deep,
Till morning light.

O, little child, be still and rest;
He sweetly sleeps
Whom Jesus keeps;
And in the morning wake so blest,
His child to be;
Love every one, but love him best:
He first loved thee.

Then, when thy work on earth is done,
Thou shalt ascend
To meet thy Friend;
Jesus the little child will own
Safe at his side;
And thou shalt live before the throne,
Because he died.

A FABLE.

THE TREE AND THE VINE.

Please help me up, just a little, where I can see," pleaded a harmless-looking little vine, creeping up to a sapling in the forest.

"To be sure I will," said the generous young tree. "Come on."

"Beware!" whispered a neighboring oak, whose massive trunk had braved the storms of more than a century, and many of whose branches were larger than the whole sapling. "Beware! that vine is poisonous and will do you no harm."

"What, that little bit of a Vine!" replied the conceited as well as generous Sapling. "Nonsense! I am strong enough to help twenty such Vines as that, even if they were enemies, as you say, and not the pretty, innocent friends they are."

"Beware!" muttered the aged counsellor; "I have seen trees as conceited as yourself bitterly repent of doing just what you now propose to do."

"Fiddlesticks! You are behind the times, Mr. Oak. Why, I have withstood storms before which your hundred-year-old brothers have fallen, and to which you yourself have yielded great branches. Come on, Miss Vine, and take my arm."

The foolish sapling extended one of his lower branches to the Vine, who tenderly clasped it. The old Oak sighed and remained silent, while the Sapling gleefully laughed and, as he felt the soft touch of the Vine, said:

"Ah, Miss Vine, you are a charming companion. You and I will show that lightning-scarred, gnarly, old fogy of an Oak that we were born in an age of progress."

"How good and clever you are!" murmured the Vine, nestling closer to him.

She was a very loving Vine. She hugged the young tree more and more closely, twined herself slowly about his body, spread out over his arms, and fettered them, climbed up over his head, and in a few years had completely shrouded him with leaves, shutting off the bright sunshine, and breathing out a poisonous breath, so that, after some faint struggles to obtain warmth and food, the tree died a lingering remorseful death.
